The Chartered Surveyors' Institution

SESSION 1931-1932.

FIRST ORDINARY GENERAL MEETING OF THE SESSION 1931-32.

Held at The Chartered Surveyors' Institution, Monday, 9th November, 1931.

ELECTION OF THREE HONORARY MEMBERS.

The Right Hon. Lord Clinton, P.C.,

Brigadier Harold St. John Loyd Winterbotham, C.M.G., D.S.O., R.E.

He stated that Lord Clinton was well known to them all as a member of the Forestry Commission and Chairman of the Commission from 1927-1929. Admiral Douglas was Hydrographer to the Navy and had rendered conspicuous service in that capacity since 1924, while Brigadier Winterbotham was the present Director-General of the Ordnance Survey. The names of the three gentlemen were then submitted for election as Honorary Members, and they were unanimously elected with acclamation.

NEW MEMBERS.

The following new members were presented by the President for formal admission to membership under Bye-law 31, and signed the Register:—

The President then delivered his Presidential Address as follows:—

THE OPENING ADDRESS.

By J. E. Bidwell (President).

In acknowledging as I do with the utmost sincerity and with genuine pride the high honour which you have conferred upon me in electing me your President, I recognise that my selection for the Chair of The Institution is due, not so much to acknowledged pre-eminence in our profession, as to the fact that I may perhaps lay claim to represent the type of practice, old-established and founded on inheritance and tradition, for which this Institution has stood from its earliest days. Both my grandfather and my father were original members of The Institution, and it is just over a quarter of a century since my father, the late Mr. Charles Bidwell, served as President. I am fully mindful of the debt which I owe to him and of the obligation incurred in trying to follow worthily in his footsteps.

I am indeed conscious of many personal shortcomings, but with the help of the Council and of the staff of The Institution, upon whose loyal co-operation every President can confidently count, it will be my endeavour to uphold the honourable traditions of the past and to promote the welfare of The Institution to the best of my ability.

As my practice lies in the provinces and is concerned to a large extent with agricultural properties in the Eastern Counties, it is perhaps natural that I should devote the greater part of my Address to the problems which agriculture has to face at the present time, and to the changes and developments which have followed or resulted from the War.

I desire, however, to place in the forefront of my Address a matter which affects not only all those persons who are engaged in the disposal of real estate, but also the public at large. I refer to the present-day standard of conduct in business of those practising in this branch of our profession. It has always been the aim of our Institution to uphold a high standard in the method of conducting business habitually practised by Chartered Surveyors, and whenever cases of departure by members from the recognised rules are brought to the notice of our Council disciplinary action has been taken. But we have to face the fact that the standard upheld, and if necessary enforced by the Chartered Surveyors' Institution, is not generally recognised, and cannot be enforced outside our own body. Unfortunately the public at large is quite unable to discriminate between the different grades of those concerned in the selling and buying of real property—the qualified from the unqualified practitioner, and the inevitable result is that we are all to some extent "tarred with the same brush."

Although the tendency to adopt undesirable practices has doubtless been accentuated by the recent general depression prevailing in business, with the consequent pressure on those engaged in the disposal of real estate to secure clients, this is no new thing, and in my opinion the lack of status and the failure to secure in the eyes of the public the honourable position which members of our profession ought to occupy is mainly attributable to the fact that the public do not feel able to place reliance on the code of honour and the method of transacting business commonly practised by many members of our profession. In the striking address delivered last July by my brother President of the Auctioneers' and Estate Agents' Institute, my friend Mr. Roland Field referred to this matter, and I am fully in agreement with the views he then expressed.

I admit that within the period of my business recollection, which extends now to forty years, there has been considerable improvement in certain directions, but no one, I think, will deny that undesirable practices of the kind to which I refer have largely increased to the detriment of the whole of our profession. This is a matter of paramount importance to all of us, whether we are directly affected or not, and I do not think I am overstating the case when I say that certain of the methods prevalent at the present time must be deplored by all who have the welfare of the profession at heart. I am not aware of any inherent reason why the dealing in real estate should lead to doubtful and untrustworthy methods of business, and I hope the day will come when the force of public opinion will eliminate this tendency. It is our duty to educate the public and to establish beyond question the fact that membership of a professional body such as The Chartered Surveyors' Institution carries with it the hall-mark, not only of qualified knowledge of the business involved, but a high and unassailable standard of business conduct.

With the object of combating amongst our members the tendency under competition to adopt certain of the undesirable practices referred to, our Institution by its Council has recently drawn up a code of conduct for observance by Chartered Surveyors, and it is our intention, with, I trust, the full support of our members as a body, to enforce this code without fear or favour. It may be that a certain proportion of our members will feel that in following such a code they are handicapped in their competition with outside practitioners ; but if that proves to be the case, I am confident that the large majority of our members will support the action of the Council, even if it results in a purge involving loss of numbers and of income. I appeal to all our members to take this matter seriously to heart, and to use their personal influence in the direction indicated by setting a good example and by discrediting all methods of business which tend to lower the status of our profession generally in the eyes of the public.

I address you at a time of the gravest depression which our country has ever known, and it is common knowledge that the industry of agriculture, and particularly the corn-growing districts, are suffering so terribly that the very existence of the industry is threatened.

Up till recently meat and milk lands have no doubt felt the pinch less severely than arable, but the laying down to pasture—a course unfortunately enforced on many in order to meet the urgent need of reducing their weekly outgoings—has resulted in largely increasing the competition in these branches of agriculture. This has specially been noticeable in the case of milk, the demand for which has not developed with the growth in the supply ; as a result, not only has the price negotiated between buyers and sellers, even for winter milk, been unremunerative, but the surplus not marketable in liquid form, for which only a small price can be obtained, has been considerable and has seriously reduced the average return to the producer.

Reference has been made above to the fact that much land has been laid down to pasture in order to reduce the weekly outgoings. This has, to my personal knowledge, been against the inclination of most farmers. They recognise that on the whole all parties represented on the Agricultural Wages Board have endeavoured to deal fairly with the difficult questions with which they have been confronted, the position of the industry on the one side, and the need for the agricultural labourer to receive a living wage on the other. Those engaged in the industry for a livelihood, however, are up against the stern fact that unless the return they obtain from their produce is sufficient to meet the costs of production, rents, rates, taxes, and other outgoings, and provide a balance in cash upon which they and their families can live, they must either give up farming or turn to less intensive methods by which their outgoings may be reduced.

It is not practicable to estimate with precision what the increased cost of labour represents in the farmer's budget, as that must depend upon the type of farming which is followed. So far as arable farming is concerned, however, Dr. J. A. Venn, of the Statistical Branch of the Agricultural Department, Cambridge University (to whom I am indebted for these figures), estimates that the increased cost of labour, due to higher weekly wages and shorter hours, represents approximately 10*s*. per acre. My own experience leads me to think that this figure is frequently exceeded.

How seriously the position of both employers and workers has been affected by the increase in overhead charges during a period of falling prices is indicated by the following table showing the progressive decline in the number of agricultural workers employed in Great Britain:—

England and Wales.

1925	803,338
1926	794,899
1927	774,449
1928	772,825
1929	770,252
1930	741,800

Scotland.

1925	122,062
1927	119,275

What, then, if anything, has been done to remedy the paralysis which has fallen upon our oldest industry? Sometimes it is said that nothing is done for agriculture, that in a Parliament, mainly representing urban interests, the place which agriculture should occupy in a properly organised community is forgotten or overlooked. I, however, while recognising that the present exceptional position calls for exceptional measures if the industry is to survive, cannot altogether subscribe to that statement.

It is only fair, I think, that we should acknowledge what has been done for the relief of agriculture. The most important gesture in this direction from the financial point of view has undoubtedly been the relief from rates extended to agricultural land. When the principle of this policy was first adopted in 1896, the opponents to the measure raised the rather effective election cry of "Doles "to landlords." Experience, however, did not prove that cry to be accurate, and the 1896 Act was continued under the Expiring Laws (Continuance) Acts by political parties of all shades of opinion. Under the 1896 Act agricultural land was relieved to the extent of half its liability to local rates. This relief was subsequently extended to three-quarters under the Act of 1923, and to the whole amount on land and buildings (not dwelling-houses) by the Local Government Act, 1929.

The sums involved were large, the Exchequer, under the 1923 Act, contributing upwards of three and a half millions sterling to rating authorities in England and Wales, and a further sum of rather more than four millions under the 1929 Act. The full extent of the relief accorded in this respect to agricultural land represents, approximately, sixteen millions a year, equivalent to an average of about 12*s*. per acre annual rent. Rather more than half this sum has come out of the pocket of the taxpayer and the remainder out of that of the non-agricultural ratepayer.

Nor was the direct relief obtained by agriculture under the Local Government Act the sole advantage it secured through that measure. It will be remembered that railways, in addition to other industries, were relieved of three-quarters of their liability to local rates, but the concession to railways was accompanied by a condition that the benefit should be passed on proportionately to agriculture through a revision of the transport rates payable for agricultural produce.

Agriculture, particularly in my part of the country, has also benefited by the attempt which the Government has made since the War to establish the beet-sugar industry in this country. Whether that attempt will in the long run prove successful or not still remains to be seen, though, as growers gain experience in the growth and getting of the crop, I see no reason why the British producer should not be able to contend with his Continental competitor. There is no question, however, that during the past few years the area devoted to sugar beet has been the one bright spot to which the East Anglian farmer could look with satisfaction. From 1924, when the subsidy was first granted, up to the present time rather more than twenty-two millions have been paid in grants to the sugar-beet factories. One cannot estimate with exactitude what proportion of this sum has reached the growers, but it has been suggested with some authority that the amount which has passed on to the producer has approximated one-third of the total, or about £6 for every acre grown.

Large sums, too, have been expended in agricultural education and research out of money provided partly by the Exchequer and part by County Councils, and in protecting our stock from the ravages of disease ; while the Development Commission and the Empire Marketing Board have devoted something like two millions a year in improvement schemes or propaganda, which should, at any rate indirectly, prove of benefit to the industry.

The Agricultural Produce (Grading and Marking) Acts and the efforts made by the Ministry of Agriculture to popularise the National Mark have also tended to educate the public as to the superiority of our home products.

I do not propose to weary you by attempting an exhaustive list of the various ways in which successive Governments have endeavoured to rehabilitate agriculture, but I should perhaps just mention two recent measures which Parliament has passed with that object. The Agricultural (Credits) Act of 1928 enables farmers and landowners to obtain loans either over long periods for the purpose of capital improvement, &c., or for short periods to enable them to meet weekly charges before the returns from their crops or stock come in. Wide advantage in all parts of the country appears to have been taken of the advances which can be made by the Agricultural Mortgage Corporation on long-term loans, though little use has as yet been made of the facilities offered for short credit advances. Then, during the present Session, has been passed the much discussed and criticised Agricultural Marketing Act. I do not propose here to discuss the provisions of that measure, but I am inclined to think that the apprehensions which have been expressed as to its provisions are not altogether justified, as a marketing scheme under the Act has to be initiated and approved by the producers themselves and cannot be enforced against the wishes of a substantial proportion of their number. While, therefore, it is true that the Act provides no protection against surplus or dumped produce from other countries, it seems probable that, in the case of certain agricultural products at any rate, an organised system of marketing might prove beneficial. A useful article explanatory of the provisions and objects of this measure will be found in the Journal for the current month.

These efforts, however, on the part of the State have quite failed to stem the tide of falling prices, and there seems grave reason to fear that, failing protection in some form or other, or the adoption of the wheat quota—(a policy which is apparently attracting increasing support, and is to be the subject of a Paper by Colonel Ruggles-Brise at our Ordinary General Meeting on the 7th December next)—corn production as such is doomed in this country. The alternative appears to be to rely on the New World as a granary and to concentrate here on securing our home market for the more valuable products of animal husbandry. This policy has been advocated very ably by Lord Lymington, M.P., in a series of well-thought-out articles in the Field.

Lack of confidence and lack of cash, however, are obstacles to the full development of stock farming in this country, although feeding stuffs are cheap enough to encourage intensive production. Meanwhile, uncertainty prevails, and the process of substituting " horn " for " corn " is only half-hearted and must necessarily be a plant of slow growth.

It must not be overlooked, too, that such a revolution in the national methods of farming is open to two somewhat serious objections. It would carry with it a further decline in the number of agricultural labourers, and the consequent loss of a class from which are sprung some of the best of our population from the point of view of health and physique ; and, secondly, it would make our daily bread wholly dependent on oversea supplies of corn and flour.

Since my Address was drafted events have moved very rapidly, and the departure from the gold standard has already affected the prices obtainable by the home producer. Any alteration in the trend or current of world trade is of necessity slow in its results, and the far-reaching effects which must follow such an upheaval as is represented by a fall of approximately 25 per cent. in the value of sterling are even yet only dimly realised. In a most interesting Paper on " The Agricultural Depression—Its Causes and Possible " Cures," read before our Institution in April, 1928, my friend Mr. W. C. D. Dampier Whetham, F.R.S. (now Sir William Dampier), indicated how the level of prices is dependent upon the ratio between commodities on the one hand and money on the other, and this Paper and the line of thought indicated are of special value at the present time. I commend this Paper to you for re-reading. Sir William Dampier speaks with authority, as he is, as well as a landowner and farmer, a recognised economist and a man of affairs, and few public men in Great Britain are better equipped to speak on such a subject with knowledge and authority.

Owing to recent events attention is now focussed upon questions of currency and their relation to the balance of trade, and in my opinion the new Government would be well advised to employ the best brains in the country to investigate this question in the belief that if the underlying causes of recurring periods of depression can be ascertained, it should not be beyond the wit of man, possibly as a result of international agreement—the machinery for which is already in being—to devise a remedy.

Now that more than a decade has passed since the country returned to peace conditions and attempted to resume its normal life, it is possible to realise how great have been the changes brought about by the after results of the War. It is no exaggeration to say that these changes have almost completely altered the face of the English countryside. The provision of houses by means of the help of State subsidy under the various Housing Acts of recent years have greatly increased the number of those living under country conditions, and I think it is true to say that the health and physique of the town worker have, on the whole, shown great improvement in recent years owing to changed conditions of life by which he is enabled to live in healthier surroundings at a distance from his work.

The building carried out, mainly in the form of what is known as ribbon development along the main roads, was at first undertaken in the rush of post-war reinstatement with disastrous results from the æsthetic point of view. Public opinion is, however, now alive to the threatened loss of the beauty and distinctive character of our rural districts, unsurpassed in any country of the world. As a result, such Associations as the Council for the Preservation of Rural England, and numerous kindred Preservation Societies, have been formed, and it is a matter for congratulation that the threatened danger to our countryside is fully realised.

Another striking aspect of the changing countryside is the passing of the greater English country houses built and equipped for a mode of life belonging to more spacious times than those of our own day. Except in a few favoured instances the maintenance of these larger mansion-houses as private residences is now impossible. The number of houses of this kind which have been converted to other uses is probably greater than is generally realised. Through the kindness of those agents principally concerned in dealing with properties of this kind I have obtained the following figures, although I do not claim that they represent by any means a complete list:—

(a) As schools and training colleges, over forty including such historic houses as Ashridge, Bryanston, Claremont, Gilling Castle, Heythrop, Adcote, and Horsley Towers;

(b) As golf clubs, country clubs and flying grounds, upwards of a dozen including such well-known properties as Aston Clinton, Lilleshall, and Moor Park;

(c) As institutions of various kinds, for religious and social welfare, more than twenty-five, including Enham, Goldings, Papworth, and Wyfold.

In addition to the above at least a dozen houses have been demolished, e.g., Cassiobury, Cheveley, and Membland.

Those who are acquainted with the conditions which affected life in the country districts in pre-war days will be able to realise how great is the effect of such a change as is indicated by the facts above referred to.

The late Mr. Howard Martin, who was our President in 1908, devoted his Opening Address mainly to the effect of the exercise of sporting rights in hunting and shooting on rural prosperity, and he was at pains to prove that in many districts the welfare of the countryside owed much to sport.

Although there has arisen since Mr. Martin's time the growth of a class of so-called humanitarians who would like to put a stop to what they term "blood-sports," I am glad to say that there is still sufficient common-sense in the country to estimate at its proper value this point of view, which is mainly based on lack of knowledge and sentimentality. The love of sport is a natural instinct inherent, in my opinion, in every healthy-minded person, and the code of sportsmen, handed down from generation to generation, may be trusted to correct any avoidable cruelty entailed in following field sports. At the present time the greatest threat to sport lies in the present financial condition of the country, but I for one am satisfied that the Englishman's love of field sports will survive all difficulties. Considerable change has, however, taken place in recent years both in the value and in the ways of letting shooting rights.

Owing to increased costs it is true to say that syndicate shooting is now the order of the day, where previously it was the exception. During the inflation period after the War the rents paid for shooting rights in the best shooting districts rose to a very high figure, rents of 5*s*. to 6*s*. per acre being common, the shooting tenant paying, in addition, keeper's wages and all expenses other than rates. The Local Government Act, 1929, added to the present economic position of the country, has adversely affected the letting value of shooting. Previous to this Act rates on sporting rights severed, i.e., exercised by any person other than the occupier of the land, were payable on the basis of the quarter of agricultural rate. Rates are now chargeable under the building column of the rate-book, i.e., at the full rate, and this fact is naturally material to the income obtainable from this source. As a result of this increased charge, and also on account of the prevailing depression, shooting rents have fallen by at least one-third, and last season there was a number of good shoots in Norfolk and Suffolk which failed to find tenants even at greatly reduced rents, and this in one of the best game seasons of recent years. In the present season this fall is further accentuated by the bad game season.

It is hardly necessary for me to reiterate what has been so frequently stated, namely, that our Institution adheres rigidly to the practice of avoiding politics ; as a body we know no politics, but that does not preclude us from commenting from a professional standpoint on any Bill or Act of Parliament which has aroused political feeling. In dealing therefore with the land values portion of the recent Finance Act, I approach the subject purely from the professional side, especially bearing in mind that a large number of our members employed in the Government Valuation

Department are faced with the task of carrying out the work of valuation entailed by the provisions of this Act ; and in this connection I should like to pay a very genuine tribute to the fair dealing which we who are in private practice receive at all times from Government valuers and their staffs. As professional valuers ourselves we are fully alive to the difficulty of the problem, and we realise, as the layman cannot do, the problem of fixing with fairness at any given date values which will stand the test of time. The layman considers—not, perhaps, unnaturally—that the values of the different kinds of real property are more or less fixed and that the market is stable, but we professionals know that for realisation purposes even quite recent transactions in similar classes of property are no reliable guide. Valuation rests largely on forming true estimates of the extent of supply and demand, uncertain quantities varying from time to time. It was mainly owing to this constant change in value that the Form IV. valuations carried out under the 1909-10 Finance Act proved to be of no practical use after the War, and the change in values could not really be attributed to alteration in the purchasing power of money brought about by the War.

If further proof were needed of the fallacy that values of real property can be fixed at any given date, no better instance could be obtained than the recent experience of departing from the gold standard, where, by a stroke of the pen, monetary values are altered, and although the purchasing power of sterling in our own country is affected but slowly, a resulting appreciation in the values of real property must inevitably follow. Quite apart, however, from the drastic and sudden changes such as those referred to, it is only necessary under normal conditions to compare prices obtainable for the same class of property in any decade. It is, in fact, true that fluctuations in the value of real property are little, if any, less marked than fluctuations in the value of stocks.

For this reason it is difficult to see what good purpose can be served by the attempt to compile another Doomsday

Book at enormous cost to the country. One is driven to the conclusion that the only practical use to which such a valuation could be put would be as a basis for expropriation of the private owner.

On the other hand no surveyor would question the right of the State to take toll of the unearned increment which has admittedly enriched the pockets of numberless private owners were it only possible to assess fairly such gain. But the failure of the increment value duty and of the undeveloped land duty set up in the 1909-10 Act have given us very recent evidence of the well-nigh impossible task of assessing fairly the gains so obtained. It is frequently asserted that land required for building purposes is held up and an inflated price demanded, but it is rare for the supply to be so restricted that what may be called "blackmail" prices can be secured, and in the ordinary course the law of supply and demand fixes the market. It is difficult, therefore, to avoid the conclusion that a similar fate awaits the present attempt to record values of real property throughout the country at a given date as attended the previous valuation under the 1909-10 Act, when the admitted failure was due not so much to the inadequacy of the resulting taxation as to the inability of the values recorded to stand the test of time.

In conclusion I feel that in the subject-matter of this Address I have perhaps given too much prominence to the rural as opposed to the urban part of our profession. There are many subjects affecting the latter which I might have referred to, but a limit must be placed to the length of this Address as well as a limit to the patience of my audience.

Mr. W. TIMOTHY HALL (Vice-President), in proposing a hearty vote of thanks to the President, said that one had only to look down the list of Past-Presidents to realise the variety of interests which The Institution represented. Mr. Bidwell brought to the Chair a wide and, indeed, a hereditary experience, seeing that his father and grandfather had been members of The Institution. There was a great deal in heredity, which enabled, as it were, the fundamentals of a man's profession to be bred from the first in blood and bone.

The President, moreover, brought to the Chair the spirit of British sportsmanship. With that spirit the people of England had been imbued from all time, and it would be disastrous if anything occurred which would lessen that spirit. It enabled a man to form quick decisions, it increased his initiative, and it developed his sense of what was and what was not cricket. A true appreciation of what was and what was not cricket would help everyone to understand the inwardness of the code of professional conduct to which the President had referred.

The President had naturally referred to the depressed state of agriculture. That depression varied in the different branches of agriculture followed in the different parts of the country. It was natural that coming, as the President did, from the eastern counties he should be particularly impressed with the depth of the depression there, because it was there that its incidence was being felt most keenly, as was the case in 1879 and the early eighties.

The depression, however, was not so intense in other parts of England. Where grass farming was more generally followed, farmers had been able so far to carry on, but at the present time the drop in the price of milk and of dairy products had hit even the dairy farmer.

That, of course, raised the acute question of arable farming versus grass farming. While the latter might be the best on lands where rainfall was heavy, in the drier parts of the eastern counties and elsewhere grass farming could not be expected to be so profitable. It might be that sufficient attention was not devoted to methods of farming grass-land, and it might be that the grass itself should be cultivated, as some suggested, almost as intensely as a sugar-beet crop or a cereal crop.

Agriculture at the present time was of vital importance to the prosperity of the nation. In the last resort it was the one industry upon which they must all depend.

It was the one industry which produced wealth through the beneficent action of nature. Man might assist, but the increase was given by nature herself, and that was where agriculture differed fundamentally from the manufacturing industries.

Agriculturists, however, required stable conditions even more than industrialists. The economic lag was felt more severely in agriculture than in manufacture. A manufacturer, when times were bad, could cut down his production, but the farmer had to produce to the limit of his capacity or almost to that limit all the time. Land must be cultivated and stock must be fed and tended. The farmer might have to wait as long as eighteen months for his profit. Hence the importance of monetary conditions to the farmer, and the Paper which Sir William Dampier read in 1928 was well worth perusing again at the present time in the light of the events which had happened since it was written. Sir William had, on 2nd November last, addressed the Farmers' Club on monetary conditions, and had referred to the possibility of the use of silver in connection with gold, though without any very definite suggestion whether that was to be by bimetallism or by what means.

It would not, however, become him that evening to dilate on monetary matters, and he would only urge, with the President, that the best brains and ability of the country be devoted to investigating the causes of the present world-wide depression which, so far as one could judge, had its roots in the present appreciation of gold.

Finally, as to the present change in rural conditions. It was, in fact, a revolution. Country life had changed enormously since the War. Improved means of transport had wrought great changes in the life of the villagers. The town tradesman was able, with motor transport, to bring produce and supplies to the doors of the cottagers, but there was one tendency which, he thought, ought, if possible, to be guarded against. He knew from experience that although the cottager in the country could obtain supplies of foreign produce—Danish bacon, Canadian cheese, condensed milk, and so on—he had the greatest difficulty in obtaining supplies of local produce, and any steps which could be taken to enable a local market to be provided for local produce would be to the advantage both of producers and consumers.

He would now propose a cordial vote of thanks to the President for his Address.

Mr. PERCIVAL FOX TUCKETT (Vice-President), who seconded the vote of thanks, said that The Institution were to be congratulated on having Mr. Bidwell as its President for the present year. His period of office was likely to prove one of the most important and critical years through which this country had ever passed, and it would also be an important year for The Institution. When the President first took office the clouds of depression were very thick and black ; now, however, that a National Government was in being a silver lining had appeared, and he hoped that before Mr. Bidwell laid down his office at any rate the heavier clouds would have passed below the horizon, even if the sun of prosperity had not returned to its full strength, as was, indeed, hardly yet to be expected.

The National Government had a heavy task before it to bring England back, he might almost say, to solvency, and one of its greatest problems was that of agriculture and how to set the poor farmer on his feet again. In these circumstances The Institution could not have had a better President for the present year than Mr. Bidwell, and there was no one more willing or more capable of assisting the Government with advice if they needed it.

With regard to improving the outlook for agriculture, import taxes on raw materials, especially on food-stuffs, needed serious consideration, or more harm than good would be the result. The depreciation in sterling would, in due course, increase the price of imports and to this extent help farmers, but it seemed to him that a tax on imported flour could be put on at once without hurting anyone and would certainly help farmers and the English milling trade.

The President had referred in his Address to the decision of the Council to tighten up the code of professional conduct, especially in connection with solicitation of instructions. In his opinion that step was essential for maintaining the reputation of Chartered Surveyors as the responsible advisers to the public on all questions affecting land. Possibly some of the younger members who had to meet severe and unfair competition might be losers to begin with, but he was certain that in the long run they would thank the Council for the attitude it was taking.

Colonel Sir GEORGE COURTHOPE, Bt., M.P. (Associate of Council), wished to join with previous speakers in thanking the President, and in congratulating him on his accession to the Chair. The President had referred to sugar beet in his very able Address, and possibly he himself might without impropriety add a few words on the subject.

In the first place, the autumn crop was a much better one than had been expected, so far as quality was concerned. It was light in weight in some districts, but the quality was high. He had received the returns from several factories that morning, all of which showed an average sugar percentage in excess of 18. It was not to be expected that that would be maintained all through the season, but it was satisfactory at the present time of the year to get 18 per cent. of sugar, and especially as the crop, although light in some districts, was not so everywhere. There had been some very good crops. He had been studying the returns from a crop of his own, and he found he was credited by one factory with over 90 tons of clean beet from 6 acres, with an average of just over 18 per cent. If that could be kept up, it would be well worth while.

Many people wondered how the sugar-beet industry would face the present very critical times. He thought it would be maintained not by a permanent continuance of the present subsidy, but by an adjustment of the sugar duties. The probability was that two purposes would be served at one time, namely, protection would be given to the home-grown beet-sugar industry, and an increased preference afforded to the West Indian cane-sugar industry—an Imperial preference. A relatively small increase of the full duty on sugar from foreign countries, and the maintenance of the 50 per cent. proportion of Imperial preference, together with the abolition both of the excise duty on home-grown sugar and the subsidy now paid to that sugar, would simplify the whole transaction and save the taxpayer very considerably. It might actually slightly increase the revenue now derived from the sugar imported into this country.

The sugar-beet industry was not introduced in this country with the intention that it should be a main crop. It had become so in the eastern counties and elsewhere only because the cereal crops had failed to justify themselves. Sugar-beet ought to be the cleaning crop or a cleaning crop in the arable rotation, and it would be better for agriculture if it resumed its place as such. It should be a crop which improved the land as well as cleaned it, and would fetch a reasonable cash profit at time of harvest. If that could be maintained on an arable rotation, and fitted in with wheat, barley and other crops, it was all the agricultural industry should ask for.

In conclusion, he too would like to sound a note of optimism, a note which he thought arose inevitably from the present state of the country, a state of grave financial peril, in which the country's overdraft on international account was growing at an alarming rate because it had been buying so much more abroad in recent months than it had sold. The task of the National Government was to rectify that position. He did not think they would fail, but if they did, and the purchasing value of the pound collapsed, the only two things in the ultimate resort worth having were land and live-stock. Agriculture would be the last section of any country finally to collapse in a state of internal chaos. That, however, was not likely to happen, and his note of optimism was this: A careful study of the Board of Trade returns would show that the problem to be solved was too big to be dealt with by the handling of manufactured articles only. No Government, whatever its views might be on fiscal questions, could at the present time redress the balance of trade and restore British credit without limiting to some extent the imports of competitive food-stuffs, and he argued from that that it was inevitable that in the remedy for the financial troubles of this country agriculture too must benefit, because the country must ask its agriculture to produce far more of its food-stuffs than it was at the present time.

The vote of thanks was then put by Mr. HALL, and carried unanimously with acclamation.

The PRESIDENT, in response, thanked all those present for the very kind way in which they had received his Address. He was afraid that in the opening part of it he might have thrown down a bone of contention, but it was a point on which he felt strongly.

He would like to endorse what Sir George Courthope had said about sugar beet. It was a matter of surprise to most people that, in spite of the lack of sunshine this summer, there was such a high percentage as 18 per cent., for he believed no one would have been surprised if that percentage had been as low as 14 or 15. It came also as a very pleasant surprise that the yield was not too bad. He understood Sir George to say that in Kent 6 acres produced 90 tons, and that was a matter for congratulation. In the Fen country people were pleased with 12 to 14 tons to the acre.

He was glad to hear any note of optimism with regard to agriculture. Personally he was an optimist, but in the corn-growing districts in the eastern counties farmers had been passing through a terrible time: he only hoped that if they could hold on for a little while longer they would get some help which would put the industry on its legs again. Those who, like Mr. Hall, lived in a more favoured district, where grazing could be carried on and dairy farming undertaken, might not perhaps realise what a struggle the farmers had had in the corn-growing districts of East Anglia. He would again like to thank the members for the kind way in which they had received his Address.

The proceedings then terminated.

THE WHEAT QUOTA.

By Colonel E. A. Ruggles-Brise, M.C., M.P.

To be read at the Ordinary General Meeting of The Chartered Surveyors' Institution on Monday, 7th December, 1931.

1. Introductory.

The preparation of this Paper has had to be undertaken in the absence of any official announcement by the National Government as to the precise method to be adopted in carrying out its declared intention of bringing assistance to the growing of wheat in this country by means of a Quota System and a Guaranteed Price.

The following scheme is based on the proposals put forward by the writer at the Agricultural Conference held in 1930, and, apart from a few modifications in light of subsequent events, it remains unaltered in principle.

2. The Arable Theory.

It would be out of place in this Paper to discuss at too great length the question as to the importance and necessity of maintaining a wheat acreage in this country, whether purely from the agricultural or from the wider national point of view. Suffice it to say that every body of expert opinion which has studied and reported on the vexed question of British Agriculture for years past has come to one common conclusion, namely, that it is of first importance to maintain the arable acreage of the country, and, further, that as wheat is the pivotal cereal of the arable rotation, it is to this particular crop that attention should first be paid. As instances of this, the reports of the Selborne Committee of 1917, of the Agricultural Tribunal of Investigation of 1922, and of the Agricultural Conference of 1930, may be cited. The decline of arable acreage is indeed viewed with alarm by all those who have made a study of the problem, and the fact that the whole industry has been thrown out of balance by this decline is now being clearly recognised on all hands. There still remains, however, a school of thought which advocates the abandonment of wheat growing, and, indeed, of arable farming in this country, and the substitution for it of grass-land farming. A moment's reflection should suffice to dispose of this theory. In the year 1929, of the total agricultural land of this country (29,521,000 acres) roughly one-third was arable land (9,948,000 acres). It is computed that arable land as compared with grass-land gives a ratio of volume of production of three to one and of volume of employment of five to one.

It follows from this that the one-third under the plough produces not merely as much as the other two-thirds of grass-land, but half as much again, that is three-fifths of the total. Of agricultural employment it provides five-sevenths. It is clear that, on the grounds both of production and employment, arable cultivation should not merely be maintained, but, indeed, encouraged and increased by every possible means. This can be secured without any detriment to a more intensive production of live-stock.

But it has to be remembered that while live-stock can be produced in far greater quantities than now, and it is to be hoped that in due course this country will become largely self-supporting in this respect, the acreage of land required for this increased production, as, for instance, of pigs and poultry, is comparatively small, and there will still remain the problem of the best use to which to put the remainder of the land. It seems obvious that the ideal to be aimed at is to keep under the plough all such land as is suitable for arable cultivation, and with two definite purposes. First, to produce for human consumption direct supplies of food-stuffs such as wheat, barley, potatoes, sugar beet, vegetables, &c., and, secondly, to produce indirect supplies through the feeding of a larger head of live-stock. It is only by a blending of these two processes that a really intensive cultivation of the soil can be encouraged and the maximum amount of food production obtained.

In this connection it is interesting to note that almost every civilised nation of the world has already taken measures to sustain and encourage its cereal production and thus to keep its land under the plough. Amongst the measures already in use are quotas, tariffs, export bounties, control of imports by licence and prohibition.

Only this country has hitherto refused to face up to the facts of the situation, and has been content to allow its agriculture to fall into decay and to let itself be made use of as a sump and dump for the surplus products of the other nations of the world.

Two further considerations as regards the present decay in agriculture should be mentioned. First, the reduced purchasing power of the agricultural community as affecting the industrial community, that is to say, that one of the best customers of the industrial world is now largely out of the market as a customer for manufactured goods. Secondly, that owing to about 100,000 people having been driven off the land through the adversity of the last decade, a large portion of this number has drifted to the towns, thus clogging the urban labour market, competing for housing accommodation, adding to the total of unemployment, and finally, in many cases, after perhaps a brief spell of work in industry, costing the country several millions a year on the dole.

It would have been far cheaper to have granted to agriculture such measures of assistance as would have sufficed to keep these men on the land and at work.

3. WHEAT SUPPLIES.

Let us start, then, on the assumption that it is now an accepted part of national policy that Governmental action should be invoked in order to secure not merely a maintenance of, but also an increase of, the wheat acreage in this country. Let us assume, further, that it is part of national policy that, of the overseas wheat which we are obliged to buy to make up the deficiency of our home supplies, a larger proportion of such wheat should be obtained from Empire countries than from foreign countries. This is to say that it is proposed that this country, instead of buying all its supplies of wheat indiscriminately as regards country of origin as now, shall in future determine to select from whence it shall make its purchases. In order to achieve this end it is obvious that there must be to hand some instrument of selection. The Quota System has been devised to supply this instrument and to provide the means whereby the wheats selected shall be assured of their respective share of the market which this country has to offer.

It may be well to point out here that the Quota System provides an automatic anti-dumping machine in that under it a selection is made of whence our supplies of overseas wheat should be permitted to come. This brings us at once to an examination of the sources from which we are at present securing our supplies of wheat, in order to see in what direction we can make the necessary adjustments.

In the report of the Sub-Committee of the Imperial Conference on Statistics of Wheat and Flour Imports into the United Kingdom, the conclusion is arrived at that, during the six years ended 1929, 53 per cent. of the wheat imported came from Empire countries and 47 per cent. from foreign countries. In addition, an average of 335,000 tons of flour was imported from Empire countries. Expressed in percentages of the total wheat and/or flour used in the United Kingdom, we get the following approximate figures as regards sources of supply:—

Home	15
Empire	45
Foreign	40

4. Empire Trade.

The foregoing figures of the sources from which the United Kingdom draws its supplies of wheat suggest at once the possibility of an alteration, not of the sources but of the quota or quantity to be drawn from each source. During the height of the submarine campaign in the late War this country showed itself capable of supplying under pressure some 30 per cent. of its wheat requirements, that is double the quantity it is now supplying. It is further a fact that Empire countries are to-day by themselves capable of supplying more than the whole of this country's requirements of wheat. Apart, however, from the admitted importance of growing wheat in this country in the interests of British agriculture as shown above, there are also two further considerations ; firstly, that of national security based on the assurance of a larger part at least of our requirements being supplied by ourselves within this country, and the remainder by countries forming part of our Empire. Secondly, there opens up the possibility of the commercial advantage which can be secured both to ourselves and to Empire countries by a greater interchange of exports, that is by an exchange of wheat from overseas for exports of manufactured goods from this country.

5. The Home Acreage.

It is clear that the basic figure on which any calculations must be made is the amount of wheat which this country may be likely to produce. At present world prices it is obvious that wheat-growing or, indeed, the growing of any cereals in this country must continue to decline. Arable agriculture will, in fact, come to a full stop with all the consequent evils of reduced volume of output, increased unemployment, and a rapidly rising adverse trade balance in real commodities. In face of these inevitable consequences an artificial stimulus to wheat-growing becomes not merely a purely agricultural question, but one of paramount national importance.

As regards the trade balance of this country, now already definitely adverse, the contribution which agriculture can make to a correction of the position is far too little realised. Forty-five million mouths have to be fed daily, and every ton of food imported aggravates the situation. Every extra ton of food produced here makes it necessary to buy one ton less from abroad, and, indeed, to use a Parliamentary phrase, " Counts two on a division " as affecting our trade balance.

Let us suppose that an artificial stimulus is applied in the form of a guaranteed price commensurate with costs of production plus a reasonable margin of profit. We have then to consider the probable increased acreage of wheat in this country under the stimulus of the guaranteed price, and having ascertained this basic figure we can next proceed to visualise a different picture of the sources from which we may in future years draw our supplies of overseas wheat. Since violent change is at all times inimical to economic trading, it is suggested that the change-over should be gradual, but the following alterations should be attainable in the next few years:—

	1929.	1933.	1936.
	Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.
Home	15	20	25
Empire	45	55	60
	100	100	100

Comparing the figures for 1936 with the average for the six years ended 1929 given above, we get the following changes:—

	Increase or Decrease in— Percentage of U.K. supply. Per cent.		Increase or Decrease in— Percentage of each source. Per cent.
Home	+10	=	+66·6
Foreign	−25	=	−62·5

As regards the home-grown supply of wheat the figures for 1929 gave a total of approximately 6 million quarters. It is computed that of this about one-third would be retained for seed and feed, leaving 4 million quarters available for milling. Under the figures forecast above the home milling supply would increase to 5⅓ million quarters by 1933, and to 6⅔ million quarters by 1936. This latter increase, which, together with the extra wheat necessary for seed would amount to approximately 3 million quarters, would involve an increase of land under wheat of some 750,000 acres, bringing the total wheat acreage of the country to about 2,000,000 acres.

6. EMPIRE CONSULTATION.

It may be asked as to whether the Dominions, Canada and Australia in particular, would be prepared to consider the Quota Scheme. In one of his first public speeches in this country Mr. Bennett, Prime Minister of Canada, declared that the first need of his country was a larger share of our market for Canadian wheat. During the Conference the Quota Scheme was closely investigated by a special Sub-Committee ; and after this Committee had reported, the Prime Ministers of both Canada and Australia alluded to the subject in their closing speeches before the Conference.

Mr. Bennett said:—

> "I consider it proper to say that we from the Dominion of Canada are prepared to consider the desirability of accepting the Quota System as a solution of the problem of marketing our Empire wheat in the United Kingdom, having regard especially to importations from foreign countries."—[Cmd. 3718, page 243.]

Mr. Scullin said:—

> "The Dominions have very earnestly examined the alternative proposals made by the Government of the United Kingdom, and I am hopeful that, emerging > from that, something definite will be done with respect to the wheat quota. Wheat represents one of the great problems that some of the Dominions have to face at the present time."—[Cmd. 3718, page 244.]

It is suggested that the Home Government should lose no time in starting negotiations with the High Commissioners of the Dominions with a view to preparing the ground prior to the Imperial Economic Conference announced for next July, and that the following conditions should be observed:—

> (1) In the first instance the quota should cover the whole Empire and not relate to particular Dominions. Dominions would, therefore, continue to compete for their share of our valuable market as now, but their total share would be increased at the expense of foreign competitors.
> (2) The combined home-grown and Empire quotas should not exceed, say, 85 per cent. of our total requirements. A margin of our requirements of wheat is thus left open to the free competition of foreign countries, as, for instance, Argentina.
> (3) To avoid dislocation in the operations of the producers, the milling industry, the grain trade, and the shipping industry, the Empire quota should be gradually raised as indicated, and not immediately fixed at the maximum ultimately attainable and desirable.

It is not proposed to discuss here the relative merits of a quota or tariff for wheat. The question is, which of the two methods is the most scientific? Seeing that in any case this country is obliged to purchase some three-quarters of its wheat overseas, it is clear that from the widest point of view it must necessarily be cheaper for the country to pay a guaranteed price for the one-fourth of home-grown wheat rather than to pay a duty on the remaining three-fourths from overseas. Further, even if a tariff of 20*s*. or 25*s*. per quarter were imposed on overseas wheat, the British farmer might not necessarily receive a price for his wheat to cover his costs of production. But under a guaranteed price he is assured of this, while the quota gives him his market.

7. WORKING OF THE QUOTA.

The purpose of the quota is to afford a market, and it is proposed to enact that in future British mills should grind specified minimum quotas of home-grown wheat and of Empire-grown wheat, leaving the balance to be found from Empire and/or foreign wheat. The internal machinery should be worked on behalf of the Government by the millers themselves through their own association. This would cut out the necessity of any great measure of supervision on the part of the State, and would also ensure the minimum of dislocation within the milling industry itself. Country mills using chiefly home-grown wheat would continue to do so, while port mills would continue to use chiefly overseas wheat as now. The Milling Association would be required to undertake, on behalf of its members, to use and mill the quotas as specified by the Government as a whole. The recently completed rationalisation of the milling industry makes this task within its competency, especially as the number of mills now operating in this country has been reduced to a very small figure. The onus of proof would rest on the Millers' Association, who would be required to satisfy the President of the Board of Trade that the correct quotas had been absorbed by the milling industry. It should be observed that there is nothing to prevent the quota for home-grown wheat being put into operation by itself without waiting for the Empire proposals to be put into effect.

8. THE HOME-WHEAT GUARANTEE.

As soon as the results of the harvest were known, i.e., every September, the President of the Board of Trade, after consultation with a Wheat Advisory Council, would by order prescribe the quota for home-grown wheat, that is the amount to be taken by millers and converted into flour. The quota could be fixed either for a period of months or for the whole year. The price would also be fixed, and could either be varied annually or fixed for a period of years. Such price should be sufficient to cover average costs of production plus a reasonable margin of profit. On purchasing from the farmer, the miller would pay him the guaranteed price for wheat of fair average milling quality with variations for quality as now. For wheat bought through a merchant a commission would be payable.

The cost of the guaranteed price for the home-grown crop would be met in one of two ways, namely:—

> (1) The miller would be required to pay the guaranteed price himself. In this case, in order not to interfere with the existing practice of port and country mills as to the amount of home-grown wheat used in their grist, a system of certificates would be operated by the milling industry itself whereby mills grinding less than their prescribed quota would be required to purchase certificates from mills grinding more than their prescribed quota. This system would equalise out over the whole milling industry the extra cost of the guaranteed price for the home-grown crop.
> Since wheat in the process of conversion into the loaf passes through two manufacturing processes, namely, those of milling and baking, the ultimate effect on the price of the loaf would not be great in any event, due to competition in both these industries, especially when it is borne in mind that the increased price would be payable at most on one-fourth only of the whole of the wheat contents of the loaf, the remaining three-fourths consisting of overseas wheat purchased at world price as now.
> Thus, the actual cost of wheat in a sixpenny loaf is approximately twopence only, of which sum one-fourth, namely, one-halfpenny, would be affected. The resulting increase in price, therefore, even if the whole of the additional cost of the home-grown wheat were passed on to the loaf, would not amount to more than a fraction of a halfpenny. The custom in this country is for the price of the loaf to rise or fall by not less than a halfpenny, and in practice, therefore, the only effect on the loaf would be that when a rise or fall in price was normally due these changes might be hastened or retarded respectively.

(2) The guaranteed price would be met either in whole or in part by a subsidy from the Exchequer. In view of the state of the National finances at the present time, this method naturally presents some difficulty, but the position would be considerably eased in the event of a new source of revenue accruing from a general tariff on imports of foreign manufactured goods.

Whichever of the two methods be adopted, it must be remembered that the cost of the guaranteed price for the home-grown crop will depend on the world price of overseas wheat. As the world price rises, the cost of the guarantee falls and vice versa, and if the world price equals or surpasses the guaranteed price, then the cost of the guarantee is extinguished altogether, whether paid by the miller or the State.

9. FLOUR.

The annual importation of flour into this country amounts to 500,000 tons, equivalent to about 9½ per cent. of our total flour consumption. Of this 63 per cent. comes from Empire countries and 37 per cent. from foreign countries. It is clear that if millers are to be restricted to the use of wheats as selected under the quota, their position must be secured against indiscriminate and unrestricted importations of flour. As regards Empire flour it would be found necessary only to limit the amount of quota wheat which they might send us as flour. Foreign flour, however, would need either to be subject to an import duty or to be prohibited altogether as soon as treaty engagements might permit. Ample milling capacity already exists in this country to supply all our needs, and the working of our home mills to capacity would not only cheapen costs for the miller but would make available to farmers an increased supply of offals at lower cost.

10. WORLD PRICE.

The chief wheat-exporting countries of the world are in constant competition for a share of the United Kingdom's wheat market. It is the most desirable market in the world, not merely from the fact of its dense population in a small island, but also from the fact that its arbitration terms as regulated by the grain trade stand unrivalled for equity. But at the same time it is only one of many wheat importing countries, and its purchases of overseas wheat are subject to a world price as regulated by world supply and demand. The Quota System is designed to make no difference to this. The fact that this country is only one of many buyers of world wheat, and that its purchases of wheat are to be left in the hands of the milling and grain trades as now—and not transferred to any State-purchasing agency—makes a combination of exporting countries to put up the price of wheat against this country above the world level virtually impossible. Cargoes of world wheat are constantly afloat awaiting final destination, and this fact, coupled with the keen competition for a share of our market—even under the restrictions of the quota—would ensure that this country would always be able to make its purchases of wheat at world-price level.

In any case the Government of this country would arm itself with the power of immediate suspension of the quota in the unlikely event of a combination being made against it by overseas countries.

The question of the maintenance of world price was exhaustively examined by the Committee on Economic Cooperation set up by the Imperial Conference, 1930, under the chairmanship of the President of the Board of Trade. This Committee gave it as its opinion that under an Empire Wheat Quota System there was no reason why world-price equilibrium should not be maintained, and it concluded its report in the following terms:—

> "It appears to us, therefore, that a quota which secured to Dominion wheat a guaranteed market for a quantity of wheat in excess of the figure of recent years would be pro tanto beneficial to the wheat-exporting Dominions by giving them a secured market, of which they could not be deprived by any dumping competition, for a definite quantity of their exports, and this advantage would be enhanced in so far as it was possible to increase the quota progressively over a period of years. In this connection it should be observed that the quota would be a guaranteed minimum, and that it would be open to the Dominions to compete equally with foreign countries for the remainder of the supply apart from that reserved for United Kingdom wheat."—[Cmd. 3718, page 94.]

11. CONCLUSION.

It is submitted that the Wheat Quota Scheme, coupled with a Guaranteed Price for the home crop, provides for the British farmer both a market and a price for his principal cereal, and to this extent is a real contribution towards achieving a restoration of British agriculture. To the Dominion farmer is offered a much fuller share of the market for overseas wheat purchased by the mother country. Under reciprocal arrangements this should accrue to the advantage of the home manufacturer through an increased export trade. The interests of the milling and grain trades in this country are interfered with as little as possible, and the restriction on imported flour leading to a fuller employment of milling capacity in this country should compensate adequately for any inconvenience suffered by millers. The consumer is protected by the preservation of a world price for overseas wheat. Finally, the Quota System offends no principle of any political party, and thus offers both to British and Empire agriculture that which is so often lacking, namely, continuity of policy in Government action.

A DISCUSSION took place on Colonel E. A. RUGGLES-BRISE'S Paper entitled

THE WHEAT QUOTA.

Colonel Sir GEORGE COURTHOPE, Bt., M.C., M.P. (Associate of Council), said it gave him great pleasure to propose a vote of thanks to his old friend and colleague in the House of Commons Colonel Ruggles-Brise for the excellent Paper to which they had all listened with such pleasure, and he had to thank the Chairman for allowing him the privilege of proposing the motion. He was particularly grateful because he felt, he might almost say, a fatherly interest in the scheme which Colonel Ruggles-Brise had evolved after years of careful study and intense work, because he believed that the first occasion upon which it had seen the light was at a meeting of the Conservative Agricultural Committee in the House of Commons some years previously when he was chairman of that body. Later he had the opportunity, as one of Colonel Ruggles-Brise's colleagues on the Agricultural Conference sitting at the Ministry, of supporting him when he brought the scheme forward in approximately its present form.

For a long time, as most members knew, the question of wheat supply and the maintenance of arable cultivation in this country had been taxing the ingenuity of politicians of every political party. It had been a very difficult task. All were agreed that without going into the question of the interests of the farmer it was in the nation's interest to maintain arable cultivation and the employment that it gave, and that, if that was to be done, wheat must be one of the first if not the paramount consideration, because our arable system hung, and of necessity hung, in the greater part of the arable districts, round wheat. There was a further general agreement in all political parties that, whatever view one took of the future prospects of war or peace, it was undesirable that the dependence of this country upon sea-borne supplies of the mainstay of life should increase. But when one came to consider methods, from whatever point of view the subject was approached, one was met with great difficulties because the difference in the production cost of wheat in this country and other parts of the world was so great that the gulf obviously could not be bridged by a simple method such as a protective tariff without so great a disturbance of price as could not be contemplated in a country like ours, where there were scores and scores of consumers for every one who was interested in food production ; it would never be tolerated. He thought that Colonel Ruggles-Brise was to be heartily congratulated upon evolving the scheme which had been accepted from amongst many others as the most desirable method of bridging the gulf and finding a means of maintaining and, it was to be hoped, increasing arable cultivation, and thus ensuring that our dependence upon overseas wheat was not increased, and might even be decreased. Colonel Ruggles-Brise's scheme did that with the minimum of interference, so far as could be foreseen, either with price or with the ordinary machinery of distribution.

He did not think he need add much about the scheme itself. The Paper was so admirably clear that no one who had listened to it or read it could fail to see the picture which the author wished to present, and so he would not weary the meeting longer, but would be content with thanking Colonel Ruggles-Brise himself and moving a most hearty vote of thanks on behalf of the meeting to the author for the very interesting and enjoyable half-hour which he had given them.

Mr. ROBERT COBB (Member of Council), in seconding, said he was very pleased to be able to associate himself with the vote of thanks, because although Colonel Ruggles-Brise might not realise it (because he was not often present) he had served with him on a Special Committee of the Central Chamber of Agriculture, which had produced, with the Federation of British Industries, a little booklet called The Agricultural Policy, a document which he would commend to all for perusal, for it combined not only the country's views but also the town's views. He also desired to thank the author for all he had done for British agriculture as a whole. Colonel Ruggles-Brise was one of the pioneers of British agriculture. As they all knew, England had been made by pioneers, and he hoped that at last they would see something appearing on the horizon of British agriculture that was not dimmed by the fog of continual vested interests on the other side.

The author had referred—in fact the whole Wheat Quota Scheme referred—to wheat only, but he did feel that, considering the question broadly—he was not complaining, because at last they had got the Government to do something—sooner or later they would have to consider other quotas or schemes for other cereals. It was not all land in England that would grow wheat year after year, though a good many farmers tried, and that was where the banks came in. It was not every field that would grow wheat at all, and therefore they had to consider other matters besides wheat. He had been a little disappointed, if he might say so, that the author had not referred to price. If anybody asked farmers—for the moment he was speaking as a farmer—it would be found that they were more interested in price than in anything else, and unless the Government was going to give the farmers a price that would be of substantial use, they might just as well put the wheat quota in the wastepaper basket. He was of opinion that, without allowing anything for unexhausted values, wheat could not be grown under £8 an acre. Taking an average yield of 4 quarters to the acre, most members of The Institution could work out for themselves what that came to. To that must be added, as the author had said—though with that most townspeople did not seem to agree—a reasonable margin of profit. This was the first occasion on which he had heard anybody suggest that.

The author went on to refer to the costs to the country of a guaranteed price as against a tariff. Personally he thought that there was everything in favour of the guaranteed price, providing it was sufficient ; a guarantee to be effective should cover the cost of production, which a tariff very likely would not. He had read in a newspaper that day—he had forgotten whether it was the Daily Herald or the Times—of a suggestion of 4*s*. duty on imported wheat. That was no use to anybody at all. What was wanted was a guaranteed price to cover the cost of production. As a practical instance of that he would call attention to the hop duty. What had the hop duty done? The growers had been selling the hops for less than the duty, and it did not meet the cost of production.

The author went on to say that he thought prices ought to be fixed annually, say, in September. He supposed that Colonel Ruggles-Brise thought that the harvest was always finished by September, but this year he himself had been carting wheat in October. It should be remembered that the guarantee of a few shillings to the price of wheat made very little difference to the cost of the loaf, but it made a vast difference to the acreage.

As to the machinery for working the quota, apparently that was going to be run through the trade channels. As long as the quota was carried on through the ordinary trade channels he thought the scheme might work well, but it was no use to put in Government officials with blue suits and tie them round with red tape. He had been in communication with several millers, and he thought that a tribute should be paid to them for the patriotic way in which they had considered the question. There was no doubt that from their point of view they could not favour the quota. Even the strongest English wheat would not give the yield in flour that the Manitoba wheat would give, and it was therefore great credit to the millers that they were going to endeavour to work the scheme. At the same time, in the end, it was up to the consumer who had to eat the bread, and if he did not like the wet spongy bread from English wheat, then the farmers had got to see that they grew a stronger wheat, a wheat that would give not only the quality but the quantity.

In conclusion he desired to ask a question to enlighten his own ignorance. If 15 per cent. was the percentage to be used by the millers, and the English crop was more than that 15 per cent., what was going to happen to the poor farmer who was late in the market and did not sell his wheat to the miller? It seemed to him that he would be landed with the merchants who would sell it for chicken feed, although the wheat might be just as good as that supplied to the miller. There might be some difficulty there. The guaranteed price should be on every quarter of wheat that was fit for milling purposes.

Sir WILLIAM DAMPIER (Visitor) offered his sincere congratulations to the author on the fact that a scheme which he had worked out so long ago, and for which he had fought so hard, had at length been accepted by the powers that be.

If he offered one or two criticisms and asked one or two questions it was not that he doubted the desirability of the general scheme for the quota of English wheat. Owing to certain causes which would be known to all of those present, the price of wheat in the markets of the world was now, and probably would remain for some time, below the cost of production, and he thought it was quite fair to help the English farmer over a very difficult time. But it must not be forgotten that while cheap corn was ruin to the East Anglian arable farmer, there were probably more English farmers who gained by cheap corn than lost. The stock-feeder, the poultry farmer, needed cheap feeding-stuffs as did some other trades. The biscuit manufacturer, for instance, used English soft wheat and gained by its being cheap. While he thought it was quite right in present circumstances to reserve a certain fraction of the market for the English grower, he trusted that those considerations would not be overlooked. They must not, when trying to help the grower, injure those who used corn for other purposes.

The general assumption which seemed to underlie a good deal of what the author had said was the desire that, as far as could be, imports should be cut down, and that England should become, as far as possible, self-supporting. He thought that that idea might have been right as long as they were struggling to remain upon the gold standard, but the situation had been completely changed since they departed therefrom, a change which was often overlooked. They had now got what some people thought was a variable £. Really the internal purchasing power of the £ had not altered much ; it was gold that had misbehaved. Anyhow, the English £ was not now linked to gold, and it could adjust itself in terms of gold according as the exchanges demanded. If their imports were too great and their exports too small, the £ would fall, prices, measured in £'s, of world commodities would rise, exports would be stimulated and imports would be cut down. The machine was a beautiful and automatic means of adjusting the balance of trade, and if only the authorities would leave the £ alone, if they would, on the other side, guard against runaway inflation, and, on the other hand, cease to try to force up the £ into its old relation with gold, the variable £ would adjust our balance of trade. He did not mean that the production of any one commodity such as wheat, or even of any general class of commodities such as agricultural produce, would necessarily become lucrative again, but the balance of trade, as a whole, would adjust itself.

It was quite true, of course, that all nations were now engaged in trying to cut down their imports and were vainly struggling to maintain their exports—trying to sell without buying. He was not quite convinced by the democratic theory that what a majority said was necessarily right. He had not much faith in democracy himself, and he was not obliged to conform to its theory. He was not convinced that because all countries were trying to increase their exports and diminish their imports, that such a policy was necessarily right either for them or for us. After all, England was the largest foreign trader in the world, and stood to lose more than any other country by a general diminution in foreign trade. He yielded to no one in his dislike of the foreigner, though, after all, he supposed that foreigners were God's creatures, and as long as they could maintain an adequate fraction of the trade for the English producer, when prices were falling, he thought it was wise to take what they could from the foreigner as cheaply as he would sell it. It must not be forgotten that, if trade was left alone, it would find its natural and cheapest channel, and that, speaking roughly, every country would produce those things which it could produce most cheaply and most efficiently.

Mr. E. S. W. Dale (Chartered Surveyor) said he had been very interested in reading the Paper, because practising, as he did, in an agricultural district, the subject was one in which farmers, of whom he was one, were naturally concerned, namely, how to bring the land back into cultivation.

As far as wheat was concerned, he quite appreciated that it was an important crop from the point of view of many arable farmers, but he thought that perhaps they had stressed the importance of wheat to too great an extent. As a previous speaker had said, " there was a good deal " to be said for encouraging other branches of farming." " Man could not live by bread alone," and he thought it was most desirable to encourage the farmer who produced the other food-stuffs which were just as necessary for the consumer as wheat. He was not at all sure that it would not be a better thing to encourage such production to an even greater extent than wheat. There was only a limited amount of land in this country which was suitable for wheat, whereas there was a very large area which was only suitable for the production of other cereals or for stock-raising purposes.

It was desirable to encourage the farmer to farm in such a way as would restore fertility to the land. Everyone knew that the land had been depleted of a great deal of its fertility in recent years, for the simple reason that farmers had not been farming up to the standard of former years. They had not been in a position to do so, and in his view it would be much better to see produce walk off the farms rather than be sold off the farms. There seemed no reason why the quota system should not be applied for the encouragement of other crops than wheat. It was a mistake to look upon wheat as the one important agricultural product produced in this country. His personal view was, let the foreigner or the Colonies send us as much wheat as they liked but not flour. The importation of flour should be limited, but as much wheat as the foreigner or Colonial exporters desired should be admitted. He would rather protect the market against the importation of meat. Provided they had cheap offals and feeding-stuffs, they could produce meat in this country, not perhaps as cheaply as the foreigner, but quite as economically as they could produce wheat, and it was just as important that they should produce their own supplies of meat as that they should produce their own wheat. By feeding stock they would maintain the fertility of the land, and that was a very desirable object.

He was afraid he had been rather critical on the matter, but he took perhaps a wider view than some people did when they looked upon wheat as the commodity the encouragement of which was most urgent. He did not hold that view. There were more farmers dependent upon the production of other commodities who needed just as much assistance as the producers of wheat. Except from the national point of view in the case of war, which they all hoped they should never have to meet again, he could not see that there was any particular reason why wheat should be given preference over any other branches of farming, such as the production of beef, mutton, pork, eggs, and milk. It was a shame that they should be flooded out by imported milk when they could produce every drop of milk needed, and yet it was allowed to be imported. There seemed no reason that a fair price should not be fixed for that commodity, a price that was fair both to the producer and consumer. Though his views were perhaps a little in advance of some of the speakers, it had been most interesting to him to read the author's most enlightening Paper, and he desired to add his thanks to the author.

Mr. E. W. K. SLADE (President, National Farmers' Union) said that when the President had very kindly asked him to participate in the hospitality of the Council and to attend the meeting, he had given him no intimation that he would be asked to speak, and although he was not at all well up in Parliamentary procedure in any shape or form, he thought he ought to have had notice of that question. Consequently he had no notes at all, but he could not refrain from taking that opportunity of joining with others in expressing his appreciation of the efforts of Colonel Ruggles-Brise to help the arable industry by the proposed introduction of what was known as the Quota System. What had been Colonel Ruggles-Brise's child had now become the adopted child of the Government, and he hoped that the latter would not hamper that child's growth by trappings and restrictions. If that child had free room to grow and to develop, then it might have possibilities which would be of real help to the agriculturists of this country.

He took it that one or two of the points mentioned by previous speakers were intended to be provocative, and to cause some of those who were perhaps not so broad-minded to think the National Farmers' Union had been so bred as to say—and it had been endorsed in very distinguished company—that wheat was a key-crop in this country, a basic crop, and that it was because the balance had been destroyed that there had not been a full development in our stock-raising programme during the last few years. It seemed to him that if they could get the balance of their rotations restored, if they could get wheat into its right place, then agriculturists would have some money to buy stock with, and the yards of the Eastern Counties would again be filled with that fine class of stock which used to be sent to their markets, and gave the auctioneers the opportunity to show their skill and help the vendors. He submitted that the position into which wheat had been allowed to get had something to do with the general agricultural situation.

Sir William Dampier had made reference to the fact that it might be unwise to attempt to bolster up a particular crop for the advantage of some people and thereby deprive others of the cheap feeding-stuffs they required. Consequently the suggestion would seem to be that a sacrifice of one individual to others would be an advantage. He was not inclined to think quite like that. He desired to ask a question which probably the President, with his wide experience, or Colonel Ruggles-Brise, would be able to answer, namely, what had the cheap feeding-stuffs of all sorts done for this country? A year of two ago there had been a clamour for cheap feeding-stuffs, both for man and for beast. He had ventured to suggest at the time that what was very sweet for the moment would be the bitterest pill that their agriculturists had ever had to swallow, and he thought that that prophecy had now been fulfilled. Coincidentally with cheap feeding-stuffs production had come right down. No country in the world could produce at below cost for any length of time, and, consequently, in time, though the price was bound to go up, it would be difficult to raise the value of the finished article because the public would not like the altered price level.

Those who were present as agriculturists and as representing agriculture were grateful to the Agricultural Committee in the House for the work they had done. Cheap food had reduced profits below a remunerative level, and that was not an advantage. Moreover, what had unreasonably cheap food done for the public? It had brought about unemployment. What was desirable was a reasonable price and a reasonable price level. He believed that violent fluctuations of price were of no use to anyone.

Agriculturists were sufficiently broad-minded to say to-day, as they had said for some time, that their proposals were not only calculated to be of advantage to their industry, but if the people wanted to restore what was now so much talked about—the trade balance—there was no industry, or section of industry, in this country which could bring that about so quickly as the agricultural section of the community. If one wanted to find employment for the unemployed, he ventured to say there was no industry which could so quickly absorb some of those who had gone from the country to the towns as the agricultural industry, and those present should carefully consider what position was likely to arise if the rural districts, the countryside, were deprived of that labour which was so necessary. He had no doubt that Mr. Dale, as he passed through the agricultural districts of Hampshire, was not satisfied with the condition of the country. He was told that in Hampshire there were certain gentlemen who were going to mechanise farming, and they were going to grow wheat on 500 acres of land with two men and a tractor. He very much doubted whether it was to the advantage of the nation to advocate such a policy or whether, indeed, it was practicable. If the right balance of farming were restored, then there would be a chance not only for agriculturists, but for the country as a whole to prosper on the basis of the interdependence of town and country.

Mr. WILLIAM EDWARDS (Visitor) approved and welcomed the Paper, and said that his family had always been interested in agriculture. On Wednesday he proposed to go down to a farm in Wiltshire with a view to deciding what his future policy should be. That farm used to employ 18 men, and had under the plough 169 acres. It now employed two men and a boy, and had under the plough only 18 acres. When he knew what the price was to be, perhaps it might be possible again to put 169 acres under the plough and take on seven or eight men. He felt that not only wheat, but barley and oats must also come under the Quota System. Frederick the Great had said that Germany should sell all she could to foreign countries and buy nothing from them. That has been tried on the Continent, and it had brought ruin and failure in its train.

One speaker had referred to the possibility of increasing flocks. On their farm his family used to have 400 sheep and 100 cows, and they had in recent years also lost money on that. He felt that one of the things that would also have to be dealt with, and which might have to be stopped, would be the importation of flour unless accompanied by the offal. If flour and offal were imported it would perhaps enable farmers to raise more stock, and almost certainly fill the empty pigsties again.

Mr. J. W. TYLER (Chartered Surveyor) said he had recently been questioned by tenant-farmers in Yorkshire as to what the wheat quota meant, and he had replied that he was unable to tell them, because he did not know what the price was going to be for wheat. Their remarks had been instructive, and now he hoped to be able to tell them a little more about the wheat quota, especially when he knew what the price was going to be.

In the course of collecting rents there and elsewhere he had found it necessary to devise some scheme for allowances or returns to be made from rents, and for this purpose he had prepared a scale based upon the average price of wheat, barley, and oats. One ought, he thought, to try and avoid looking solely at wheat, because in Yorkshire barley was commonly grown, and some oats. The scheme had been favourably received by some tenants, though not all. The return of rent varied from 25 per cent. when the average published official price for the previous six months of wheat, barley and oats combined was at 7*s.* a cwt., or under, varying down to nil when the average price rose to 10*s.* This arrangement had been received favourably by some, but not all of the tenants on one estate. He had rent arbitration notices from five or six, and he had partially succeeded in satisfying them by this process. The question whether it was to be wheat only, or wheat, barley and oats, was not of importance in his opinion. The Government were moving, and it was good to know that something was about to be done.

On the subject of the suitability for milling of English wheat, they would have seen a letter from the Duke of Newcastle in that morning's Times in which he referred to the introduction by him of a small measure of Canadian wheat three years ago. The Duke had tried it out here for three years, with apparently highly satisfactory results. It ripened more quickly than English wheat, and the Duke hoped that it would be possible to introduce into this country a wheat which was more suitable for milling than that now generally grown in this country.

Colonel RUGGLES-BRISE, in reply, said he was very grateful for the kind way in which the meeting had listened to his Paper and also for the vote of thanks. His old friend and colleague Sir George Courthope was much too generous. He felt that any little efforts that he might have made in his short political life towards assisting British agriculture paled into complete insignificance when he looked at Sir George Courthope's long record, his life's work, in the political world for our chiefest and our greatest industry.

Mr. Cobb had asked why he had not said anything about quotas for other cereals. His reply to Mr. Cobb, and also, he thought, to Mr. Dale, was that the Paper which he had read was not a disquisition on British agriculture, nor was it a sermon on arable farming ; it was merely an attempt to try and explain a system which was new to this country, and which, indeed, was comparatively new to almost all countries. It had not been in operation for long anywhere, and now that it was apparently to be adopted in this country, the Paper had been confined to an attempt to explain the principles which underlay the quota system, both as it affected the home crop of wheat and also the Empire countries. That might perhaps be accepted as a sufficient answer to those who had taken the view that he had restricted the scope of his Paper too narrowly. He might at some future time have to deal with barley, but he hoped not as a quota for barley, which would be an even more thorny subject than one for wheat, and that was bad enough.

Mr. Cobb had said that he welcomed the suggestion that the guaranteed price should be one commensurate with the cost of production and the words " there should be " added thereto a margin of profit." He entirely agreed as to the importance of those words, and that was why he had put them in.

Mr. Cobb had also asked what would happen if the supply of wheat exceeded the 15 per cent. quota. The 15 per cent. was merely the figure of the average of the six years preceding and including the year 1929. Actually to-day our home supply of wheat was something between 13 and 13½ per cent. only. He did not know what the Government was likely to fix as the commencing quota, but he had indicated in his proposals that the Government should fix the quota at approximately the available supply each year. If one remembered that they had the June returns, and that the crop reporters reported on the condition of the crop in August and September, while thrashing began in some parts of the country quite early in August and went on practically uninterruptedly through the harvest, so that they would have some knowledge of how the crop was likely to turn out on thrashing, it should not be difficult by the end of September to make a fairly reliable estimate as to the number of million quarters of home-grown wheat which would be available. His suggestion was that, from that information, the Government should say what the quota for the coming year was to be.

Sir William Dampier had suggested that under the quota system the stock-feeder and the poultry-keeper might have to pay more for their home-grown requirements. In his own view one of the advantages of the wheat-quota scheme was that if the stock-feeder and the poultry-keeper wanted to buy cheap wheat, either for stock or for poultry, they could continue to do so at world prices. There was nothing in the quota scheme to prevent that. It was true that if the English wheat for milling came up to milling quality, it would be sold primarily to a miller. If a poultry-keeper wanted particularly to buy English wheat, he might be tempted to do what he so often did at present, pay more for it ; but if he did not want English wheat, there was nothing in the quota scheme to prevent him buying any kind of overseas wheat at world prices just as he did now.

Sir William Dampier had mentioned the gold standard. He, of course, dared not discuss that in Sir William's presence. All he would venture to say was that he agreed entirely with Sir William when he said that the Government should leave the pound severely alone.

Sir William had also said that he had implied that all countries were trying to diminish their imports and encourage their exports. That was not part of his Paper, if he might say so. What he had said was that almost all civilised countries in the world had been taking measures for some time past to maintain, and even to increase, arable acreage. Sir William had said that he was no believer in democracy, but happily for him he was not a politician, so he was allowed to say things like that!

Mr. Dale had asked him why he had laid so much emphasis on wheat. He had already dealt with that point, namely, that the Paper was intended to deal with the wheat problem only. Mr. Dale had gone on to quote some Scripture. He had said that " man could not live by bread " alone." He rather wished that he had completed the quotation, because without the second half of the sentence the first half standing alone was rather misleading because it was contrary to fact. The fact was that physically man could live on bread alone even if he could not spiritually, and it was that fact which made wheat-growing the world over of such primary importance. They were hard pressed in the War because the German submarines had placed their wheat in a critical condition. From the national security point of view, therefore, there was a strong argument that at least a moderate acreage of land growing wheat should be maintained in case of a national emergency of that kind. While they wanted to increase agricultural production of every possible kind, he did not believe that Mr. Dale would feel very well if after a week or two he had nothing to eat but tomatoes, lettuces and seal-kale. At any rate it was generally accepted that wheat was the pivotal crop of the arable rotation, and if it was the intention to keep land under the plough, the fostering of wheat-growing was one of the best means of so doing.

Mr. Slade, the President of the National Farmers' Union, had mentioned the ill effect on stock-raising through the decline of arable farming, and what he had said about the empty yards in East Anglia was perfectly true. It was a tragedy to go round the farms in the part that he knew best—East Anglia—where the yards used to be full of beasts ; now they were absolutely empty. Mr. Slade would probably agree that not merely had the decline of arable agriculture had an ill effect on stock-raising generally, but it had a very adverse effect on the milk industry. He was convinced that the fact that until the last week or two there had been an almost permanent glut of surplus milk was due more to the wheat shortage than to any other cause, that land which had been under the plough had been put to milk production instead. The industry was out of balance, and a reasonable return of the land to arable cultivation would go a long way to keep the stock question right, and also the milk problem as well.

Mr. Slade was perfectly right in what he had said about the clamour for cheap feeding-stuffs. The clamour for cheap feeding-stuffs had brought the price level of the finished article below the price level of the cheap feeding-stuffs ; so the people who thought they were going to do so well by being able to purchase cheap feeding-stuffs had found, when they came to sell the finished article, they had got to sell it at an even lower price level than the price level of the cheap feeding-stuffs.

Mr. Tyler had mentioned that he had recently inter-viewed several tenant-farmers in Yorkshire. He had apparently such a way with him that he was able to have his rent audit without giving too great reductions of rent. He envied him in that. He had been having a rent audit during that week, with the result that he had been wondering whether he would get any rents at all. Mr. Tyler seemed able to maintain the rent-roll fairly successfully, and he had said that some of the tenant-farmers on the estate were interested in the wheat quota, but that they were particularly interested in knowing at what level the Government would fix the guaranteed price. He entirely shared their sentiments. There was nothing that he would like to know better himself!

The PRESIDENT said that the Council much appreciated the kindness of Colonel Ruggles-Brise in addressing The Institution at such a busy time. Colonel Ruggles-Brise had been the father of the system which had been associated with his name ever since his letter had appeared in the Times, and now it was the accepted policy of the Government. Speaking for East Anglia, from which both he and Colonel Ruggles-Brise came, he knew well that wheat was the basic crop. The late Mr. Edward Strutt (Past-President), whose knowledge of farming in East Anglia was unsurpassed, had always adhered to that opinion, and if arable farmers could get a price at which it would pay them to grow wheat, there would be some relief in the corn-production area of East Anglia.

The vote of thanks to the author was then put, and carried by acclamation.

The Chartered Surveyors' Institution

AT THE ORDINARY GENERAL MEETING

Held at The Chartered Surveyors' Institution on Monday, 11th January, 1932.

Mr. J. E. BIDWELL (President) in the Chair.

NEW MEMBERS.

Fellow :

HARRISON, LIEUT.-COLONEL SYDNEY WALTER.

Professional Associates :

COX, BERNARD HUGH
DAVIS, CYRIL PERCY
EVE, ANTHONY DENYS
EVE, FRANK MAXWELL
GROVES, HERBERT GODFREY STUART
HEARNE, REGINALD WILLIAM
LOCK, PERCIVAL DONALD MACKMIN, JOHN HENRY CLINTON
NICHOLSON, THOMAS GEORGE
SCOTT, GILBERT PRESTON
WINKLEY, FREDERICK WILLIAM EVANCE
WRIGHT, EDWIN WILLIAM YOUNG, JOHN DOUGLAS

This meeting was devoted to a Lantern Lecture, entitled "The Genius of Wren," by Mr. Percy W. Lovell, F.S.A. (Organising Secretary of the London Society).

Paper 537.

THE GENIUS OF WREN.

By Percy W. Lovell, F.S.A.

After reviewing the chief features of the architecture of Greece and Rome, and touching upon the development of the Romanesque and Norman styles, Mr. Lovell explained how, by the time of Elizabeth, the English designers and craftesmen had become a little confused in their endeavour to master the various foreign traditions. English architecture was then in the melting-pot, and only awaited the directing hand of a master to emerge into new and original forms. Inigo Jones, able architect and scholar though he was, was not the man for whom they were waiting.

Wren was born in 1632 in the Wiltshire village of East Knoyle, where his father was rector and himself had a taste for architecture. He was born with the gifts of unremitting industry and an abnormal aptitude for acquiring and utilising all kinds of knowledge. At nine years of age he had written a Latin ode in honour of his father's birthday ; a number of ingenious inventions marked his later boyhood ; at thirty he had surpassed all his contemporaries in science, mathematics, and astronomy.

If Wren was born great, he also had greatness thrust upon him, for it was through the efforts of his friend John Evelyn that he was offered the appointment of assistant surveyor to the King. At that time he had only one building to his credit, the chapel at Pembroke College, Oxford, but it must be remembered that in those days education was on the broadest lines, specialisation was unknown, and it was the rule for men to take up architecture without having undergone any special training for it.

That Wren achieved greatness who would deny? They had only to glance at Cockerell's famous drawing—which the lecturer showed on the screen—illustrating on a single canvas the whole of the works of Wren, his achievements of sixty years, as though they formed a noble city of dreaming spires, with the dome of his great cathedral towering above them all. The "Dictionary of National "Biography" devoted nine columns to Wren and an average of one and a half to other persons. Of his early maturity, his long life (1632-1723), and the wealth of opportunity which came his way, his inventive and resourceful mind took full advantage. His works still stood as testimony to the greatness he achieved, and Si monumentum quæris, circumspice, was his fitting epitaph.

Wren's plan for the rebuilding of London after the Great Fire was only carried out in minor details. Many thought that that was not a cause for regret ; but his scheme had many of the features of modern town planning. He thought of the City as a whole, of its health, convenience, and amenity, of removing the filthy conditions which had no doubt facilitated the spread and increased the virulence of the Great Plague. He had suggested 90 feet as the width of main streets in the City and 30 feet as the width of the narrowest lane. Thirty feet was the average width of streets in the City to-day. His foresight must have been remarkable, but his ideas were regarded as revolutionary by the City authorities, and suffered the usual fate of ideas which were ahead of their time.

Wren's other great disappointment was the refusal of the cathedral authorities to permit the carrying out of his original plan of St. Paul's. They had insisted on the Cruciform, or Gothic, instead of the "Renaissance" plan, which latter exhibited his true genius.

Among the intensely interesting illustrations of Wren's buildings which were shown and discussed by Mr. Lovell were slides of St. Paul's Cathedral, including Wren's rejected and accepted ground plans ; Pembroke College Chapel, Cambridge ; the Trinity College Library, Cambridge ; the Sheldonian, Oxford ; the rejected town plan for the rebuilding of London ; Canaletto's painting of the Thames and the skyline of London in Wren's day ; Greenwich Hospital, Hampton Court, and Morden College ; Temple Bar ; and the City churches, including St. Magnus the Martyr, St. Michael's, Cornhill, St. Dunstan's in the East, St. Mildred's, Bread Street (interior), St. Stephen's, Walbrook, St. Bride's, St. Mary-le-Bow, and the screen at St. Peter's, Cornhill.

Mr. Lovell, in conclusion, said that each must decide for himself whether he would follow the example of a man who could create miracles of beauty out of the simplest materials, or that of the mythical mediocrity who, being afflicted with a facility for doggerel, penned the following after an hour of architectural meditation in the Strand:—

"Would God that Wren's immortal hand
And more than mortal brains
Had built St. Mary's in the Strand
And not St. Clement Dane's."

Mr. CUTHBERT LAKE (Member of Council), in proposing a vote of thanks to the lecturer, said that Mr. Lovell had given his life to London and deserved the gratitude of every Londoner for what he had done. It was he who had awakened an interest in the history and beauties of London and had called attention to the need for protecting and enhancing her amenities. His recent work for the preservation of her squares and open spaces was well known.

For a better understanding of Wren's genius he would recommend a study of the portrait in the National Portrait Gallery. His facial features showed his habit of industry, his brain power, and his self-control. His mouth, perhaps, was the secret of his genius, for he had that gift which every surveyor above all coveted, the gift of persuasiveness, and a silver tongue, the power to convince a client his professional advisor knew what was best for him. That was the genius of Wren.

He was sure that every member present would rejoice that the recent political changes had relieved them from the necessity of discussing Part III. of the Finance Act, 1931, on which their learned friend and Associate, Mr. E. M. Konstam, K.C., was to have addressed them that evening; and that they had been able instead to listen to Mr. Lovell's charming lecture which they had all so greatly enjoyed.

Mr. H. E. Gillett (Chartered Surveyor), who seconded the vote of thanks, said that an interesting sidelight on Wren's many-sided attainments and the variety of things about which he thought was the exhibition which he gave of his works and treatises at Wadham College, Oxford, in 1660. Among the exhibits were a picture of the Pleiades ; a strainer of the breath to make the same air serve in respiration ; a perspective box for use in surveying ; divers improvements in the art of husbandry ; new designs tending to strength, convenience and beauty in building ; divers new musical instruments ; appliances for submarine navigation and for measuring the base and height of a mountain " only by journeying over it."

For the demolition of Old St. Paul's he had invented a battering-ram 40 feet long and manned by thirty men. The latter were disappointed with its efficiency until Wren explained that its object was to loosen the masonry by vibration and constant impact, and that there was nothing spectacular in the process. The ram duly fulfilled its object.

For designing and supervising the erection of St. Paul's Wren had received £200 a year, half of which was paid on completion of the work. For the same services in connection with the building of fifty-one City churches he had received £100 a year. This was miserable remuneration ; but, perhaps, the great architect and surveyor would feel well repaid if he knew that St. Paul's and the greater number of his churches were still standing and were still admired by his professional descendants.

The variety of Wren's genius would appeal to every chartered surveyor, for Wren, by the nature of his attainments as well as by virtue of his office as Surveyor-General of the King's Works, was pre-eminently a surveyor, and was the first person in history to ennoble the name.

As a fellow Marlburian and as one who had known the lecturer for a number of years it gave him great pleasure to second the vote of thanks to Mr. Lovell for an address which had deeply interested them all.

The President then put the vote of thanks, which was carried by acclamation.

PAPER 538.

REGIONAL PLANNING AND ECONOMY.

By Thomas Adams (Chartered Surveyor).

To be read at the Ordinary General Meeting of The Chartered Surveyors' Institution on Monday, 8th February, 1932.

Every movement that has social amelioration and improvement of physical conditions in town and country as its objects must be put to the test of the question whether it is sound from an economic point of view. Successful realisation of such objects depends in a major degree on whether the movement will promote the economic stability of society, and, secondly, whether those objects can be achieved at a cost that is reasonable in proportion to the benefit they are likely to produce. We must always respect the distinction between these two phases of economy. The economic forces that enter into the creation, development and endurance of communities are one thing, and the process we call economy in expenditures on specific plans or projects is another thing.

I propose to refer to both, and, in doing so, will have principles rather than methods of design or laws in mind. At any rate, I do not propose to discuss the statutory methods or details of legal procedure connected with regional and town planning in England that are already familiar to members of this Institution. Rather I want to confine myself first to some broad generalisations regarding the scope and character of regional planning as a movement, and second to a description of a specific example of regional planning where special consideration has been given to economic conditions. Let us, on the present occasion, forget about regional or town planning as a legal process, and think of its possibilities as a means of securing a more stable and orderly system of urban and rural growth than has hitherto been or appeared to be attainable. But we must first give a brief glance at the origins of the movement in this country.

ORIGINS OF TOWN PLANNING POLICY IN ENGLAND.

In England regional planning has evolved from town planning, and town planning was first introduced as a branch of housing. The general object of what has been called a " town planning scheme," as stated in the original Town Planning Act, was " that of securing proper sanitary " conditions, amenity, and convenience in connection with " the laying out and use of the land " included in the scheme. In the provisions of the Act relative to compensation, certain things were deemed to be excluded from claims, which indicated that the densities of buildings to be erected for housing purposes and the amenities of residential areas were regarded, by those who drafted the legislation, as the main essentials in town planning. This emphasis on housing was the result, in part, of a reaction against the character and comparatively high density of housing developments under the Model Bye-laws. It was not an undesirable emphasis because, perhaps, 75 per cent. of the buildings in the country are used as residences, and the health of the population depends on their housing accommodation being of good quality and having an agreeable environment.

As town planning has progressed, and especially since regional planning was introduced, the emphasis on housing has been accompanied by an equal emphasis on road communications, and by a lesser but considerable emphasis on the provision of open spaces. These three elements are all of importance, but their successful treatment in any urban or rural area depends on consideration being given to the economic basis of community growth.

Without in any way criticising the policy hitherto pursued, I suggest that the time is ripe for giving more attention to major economic activities in connection with the planning of land and control of its development. By major economic activities I mean those connected with the distribution of industry and the development of industrial areas, and the improvement of facilities for transport by waterway, railway, and airway, and their co-ordination with highway communications. Incidental to these, which I regard as the fundamental elements, there are economic problems connected with power supply, production and distribution of food, and development of wholesale markets.

The Town and Country Planning Bill now before Parliament will, if passed into law, broaden the scope of regional and town planning, but not to any great extent, in the direction I have in mind in this discussion. It will have the result of including built and rural areas, and not merely land likely to be used for building purposes ; it will change the methods of claiming compensation and add to the percentage of betterment that can be claimed from owners of property ; it will add to powers of local authorities to acquire land, to secure its development in proper order and to prevent sporadic growth ; it will give legal status to regional planning ; and it will seek to control undesirable forms of local development, and to preserve amenities and buildings of architectural and historic interest.

If and when this Bill becomes law, the code of town planning in this country will be greatly improved. But the effect of the new law, and of practice of town planning under it, will depend on the extent to which schemes are based on an understanding of economic factors and on the promotion of stability in economic conditions.

It seems unnecessary to argue that no planning scheme can be soundly conceived or can result in satisfactory achievement unless it is prepared on a basis of knowledge of the economic structure and potentialities of the community with whose area it deals, and on recognition of economic considerations as paramount. Yet the matters I have mentioned have either been outside the scope of town planning law, or are disposed of in a superficial manner in town planning as it is carried out, and as the law requires it to be carried out. While many advisory regional and town development plans contain proposals with regard to waterways, railways, aerodromes, and distribution of industries, based on a survey of conditions, yet, as a rule, they have to be lightly treated for lack of understanding of their significance on the part of the public and their representative authorities, and consequent lack of financial provision to meet the cost of adequate investigation.

It is particularly in connection with advisory regional plans—that is, plans that are deliberately tentative, for guidance of, rather than for adoption by, the constituent local authorities in regions—that investigation of fundamental economic problems is needed. This is so because, while such problems should be made the subject of general recommendations, the task of overcoming the difficulties of giving them precise form in statutory plans is almost insuperable. The fact that there are certain groups of problems regarding which it is only practicable to make advisory proposals does not mean that these are not of great value, or, indeed, that they are not essential so as to provide a sound basis for preparing definite projects.

THE BASIC ECONOMIC CONSIDERATION.

If we turn to the Encyclopædia Britannica we shall find "Economics" defined by Professor Allyn Young as "a "science which is concerned with the communal problems "of economic life." As such a science, "its principal "concern," he says, "is with the intricate interrelations "of various wealth-getting and wealth-using activities and "with ways in which these activities affect the welfare "of the community." Until we understand what these activities are in any community, how essential it is that they should be developed as a result of our designs, and what their bearings are on communications, housing and æsthetic features, we cannot be sure that our planning will achieve our object of public well-being. Nor will we free from the continual obstruction that surveyors and engineers representing economic interests in land, buildings, railways and other utilities feel themselves bound to put in the way of proposals that do not have a sound economic foundation, however commendable they may be in their social objectives.

It is true that there are some of these economic activities that can only be studied in regions as large as small nations, say, in areas of the size of England, Wales or Scotland. Indeed, the first step to be taken in this country, at the present time, might properly be that of making a survey and tentative outline plan of the chief transportation facilities, and of industrial distribution in England, in the same manner as has been done in connection with electricity by the Electricity Commissioners, thus providing an intelligent framework with which to develop our plans for regions, counties, towns and districts. But my object now is not to indicate areas but to advocate more consideration of certain economic functions in whatever areas we plan. However, it is noteworthy to observe that the same reasons which led to the development of regional planning were responsible for the systems of regions adopted by the Central Electricity Board. In its first report (1928, page 1) the Board said that economies of large scale production of electricity have not hitherto been obtained because " of the inherent difficulties of a " situation which is the outcome of a strong tendency to " relate the generation of electricity to local government " areas."

DIRECT ECONOMIES FROM PLANNING.

Before dealing with the question of economy in its more fundamental aspects I will now refer to the more superficial aspect of cost in relation to direct financial profits. Obviously this is a question that is bound up with that of the scope, character and methods of preparing schemes, so that it may be that a less satisfactory answer can be given to it on the basis of what has been done than of what could be done.

May I anticipate that you have three doubts in your minds as to the wisdom of enlarging the scope of planning? In the first place you may doubt whether this is a time to spend money on more planning. Is it not rather a time to limit expenditures to absolute necessities ; and as town planning is not a necessity, is it not one of the things we can do without? In any event can we satisfy ourselves that the employment of our energies and money in promoting regional and town planning schemes will yield both immediate and ultimate economy in expenditures?

Delaying the answer for a moment let it be admitted that unless the community is convinced that planning will yield economic as well as social benefits, it cannot be expected to prepare and carry out town planning measures with sufficient courage to obtain effective results. In an important sense town planning should be town economy ; and, moreover, town economy that can be expressed in direct and immediate money values.

Indirect and prospective values are admittedly to be obtained if planning is well done and properly applied. Such values consist of improvements in environment, in living conditions, in convenience of communications, and in the distribution of building densities and uses that must in the long run prevent the recurrence of the waste and inefficiency that follow from haphazard growth. The case for these values has been made out even if the realisation of some of them appears to be remote. If there is doubt on the positive side as to the ultimate savings that may be effected by good town planning, there can be no doubt on the negative side as to the losses that communities have to endure as a result of mis-planning and lack of planning. The evils of disorder and congestion are apparent in every modern city. They are artificially created, and, therefore, controllable evils. Those who enquire into their causes can get ample evidence to show that they could have been prevented by intelligent design.

Now, under normal conditions town planning should not cause additions to public spending, but merely give wise direction to spending. It should result in preventing wasteful expenditures either in doing something we ought not to do or in doing something we ought to do, but carried out at the wrong time. A plan may lead to conservation of things that would be destroyed if there were no plan; to abandonment of projects that are premature or unnecessary ; or to carrying out of projects that are good investments. The least that can be said for it is that it is a basis for deciding what are the most and what are the least essential things to be done and the order of doing them.

Regional and town planning is most necessary in times when economy is necessary, because, if wisely conceived, such plans enable public authorities to guide their expenditures on the basis of knowledge of conditions and to decide what they can leave out as well as what they should keep in their budgets. Sound economy cannot be obtained if expenditures are voted for separate projects without knowledge of how each project will fit in with a general plan. Are we contemplating purchase of land for open spaces—then which area is most and which is least necessary? Are we approving plans for estate development—then what are the least widths of roads that are practicable? Are we proposing to build arterial roads or widen existing highways—then what parts can we do without for the time being? Are we proposing methods of control over private property—then how can we get all we want by co-operative methods and without injury to the owners? These and other questions cannot be answered unless we first have a general plan.

Mr. H. G. Wells says that to solve the problem of unemployment we must accept the responsibility of rehousing all of mankind, rebuilding cities and reclaiming the roads and countrysides. Well, if we agree, where is the money to come from? The simple fact is that it cannot be done except to a partial extent, and that over a long period of years, and only when we have a guiding plan to follow. The late Mr. Dwight Morrow, who was Ambassador to Mexico, a member of the Pierpont Morgan Bank and of the Committee on the New York Regional Plan, said, when asking himself what was the cost of planning: " I " do think it is quite demonstrable that the real cost in " building up a community is the cost of not planning."

Another doubt you may have in considering a proposal to broaden the scope of planning to deal with major economic problems in urban growth is whether the right men could be obtained to propose an effective and practical plan that would be acceptable to the many involved public and private interests. If you have this doubt, it will probably arise from conceiving the town planner as a person who designs all that is contained in a town plan. When, however, a town planner limits his plan to those things he can do himself on the basis of personal knowledge and experience, it cannot be a complete and therefore effective plan. A complete plan must be prepared by several experts, some with little knowledge of town planning but specialists in important aspects of town planning ; and the contributions of these experts must be secured by the town planner whose proper function is that of co-ordinator of design. For example, there cannot be any useful result obtained from dealing with dock approaches or railway communications unless there is co-operation between the harbour and railway engineers and the town planner. Again, a town plan must conform in its road proposals to the highway plan already worked out by national, county and municipal engineers, except to the extent that these proposals can be shown to be defective. The original contribution of the town planner is in filling in the gaps, in co-ordinating the whole structure of the plan as one conception. If, therefore, this is a proper description of the function of the planner of towns, there is no limit to what may properly be included in a plan.

A third doubt that may exist in some minds is that as town planning involves restraint of private action, it is undesirable to extend its scope, as this will result in further interference with liberty. I have some sympathy with this point of view, if, and when, it is concerned with negative forms of planning control.

Provisions in town planning schemes might well contain fewer restrictions as to what should not be done if they were made more comprehensive in a constructive sense and gave us intelligent guidance as to what should be done in the interests of sound economics as well as social amelioration.

I have not been greatly impressed by the figures that have been used on various occasions to show financial returns from town planning schemes. Much of the credit taken could have been obtained without the machinery of town planning, although not without the foresight and co-operation which are essential in the act of planning. Nevertheless, there are significant figures to be obtained from every city engineer who has prepared schemes. Mr. George L. Pepler gave specific evidence of financial benefits of town planning in describing "Twenty-one Years of "Operation of the Town Planning Act," and, recently, in December, at a meeting of the Town Planning Institute, Mr. Fred Marsden (City Engineer of Bradford) quoted striking cases. These were authoritative and showed substantial savings obtained in road construction as a result of collaboration between local authorities and owners of property, and of making new, as compared with widening old, roads under town planning schemes. The owners were shown to have derived considerable benefits from economy of construction of estate roads.

Impressive figures have been given, starting with those prepared by Sir J. Wolfe Barry 30 years ago, to show the immense losses due to congestion of traffic. These losses must be enormous, but in my judgment they cannot be calculated. It comes to this, unless we are convinced that the planning of towns is essential for public welfare as a result of our experience, and on the basis of general principles, we can never obtain conviction from mathematical calculations of the effects of not planning nor from figures showing immediate financial returns.

In the matter of experience in regard to estate development, I would abide by the judgment of this meeting, and therefore will not argue the point. When we come to large-scale undertakings, such as those connected with railway and road communications, with telephones or with electricity, we know that planning for 10 or 20 years ahead has been the policy of intelligent departments and corporations, and has proved essential to their success. The Ministry of Transport has planned its road system long in advance of its ability to finance its development ; the telephone companies of the United States have a plan of what its system will be in 25 years, prepared on a basis of a study of trends of population and industrial growth ; and the Electricity Commissioners have anticipated the needs of this country for power and light supply up to 1940-41. All these plans are essential for purposes of immediate as well as of future economy.

PROSPECTIVE INDUSTRIAL GROWTH IN ENGLAND.

Where we have been most neglectful in England is in planning of industrial growth. When I speak of the need for extending regional planning to deal with major economic activities, I have in mind, as already stated, the facilities for communication by water, rail, and air ; the distribution of power, and the development of industrial areas. With regard to chief means of transportation and sources of energy, these in combination are, and will continue to be, the greatest forces in promoting development of cities and prosperity of nations. If I had time I could probably show that one of the greatest blunders in this country has been its neglect, and, indeed, its obstructive tactics, towards the development of an efficient system of distribution of electricity. But I must pass on to refer to a phase of industrial growth that is of current interest. As we all know, there is a tendency in England for manufacturing industry to concentrate in certain places and a prospect of immigration of many new industries. It is pertinent to ask what steps we are taking to direct or control these movements in the interests of efficiency of industry and of the nation.

One of the benefits we may obtain from the coming of new industries will be in adding to the efficiency of the social and mechanical equipment of industry in this country. If, however, this benefit is to be obtained, some degree of organisation and planning of the sites best adapted for industrial development in harmony with regional plans, will be essential. Without organisation and planning, the immigration may be harmful to the physical development of the country, and prevent the realisation of some of the economic benefits that should accrue. In connection with the probability of American manufacturers establishing branches in England, one underlying consideration that has to be kept in mind is that, on the whole, they will both expect more co-operation from, and will be willing to give more co-operation to, public and transportation authorities than British manufacturers have been prone to expect and give. Because of increasing recognition of the value of this co-operation, many leaders of industry in America have taken an active part and provided large sums of money in promoting regional and town planning, with the result that added emphasis has been given to economic, as distinguished from the social and æsthetic, objectives in the planning movement.

American manufacturers in general are keen to obtain social advantages for their workers, well-co-ordinated facilities for transport by rail and road, adequate and cheap power, and, in many cases, sites possessing special prominence and therefore advertising value.

If the growth of industry is accompained by better planning and distribution of the growth, it will be an incentive to its increase. It will mean that the introduction of new factories will not add to either the bolstering up of congested conditions in the existing centres or the abominations of ribbon development. By giving proper direction to regional planning, and emphasising its economic phases in relation to transportation and industrial development, and by using it to encourage the establishment of new centres of industry in the right places, comparable in physical character to garden cities, much can be done to meet the needs of the new movement and prevent it from doing injury to the countryside and to the edges of the waterways.

The manner in which regional planning is now done means that there is a tendency to regard the arrangement and distribution of industrial and other functions from a comparatively local and secondary point of view. Road communications and amenities seem to be considered as primary, whereas, however important they may be, they are secondary to land utilisation for industry, business, and residence. Industrial distribution is a national rather than a regional problem and requires national study. More needs to be done in reserving definite sites for the use of industry after thorough examination of their suitability for this purpose. Industry will spread itself anywhere, to its own injury perhaps, if it is not encouraged to go somewhere. Normally not more than 5 to 15 per cent. of a town is devoted to industries, and it is essential that the greater proportion used for residence should not be injured by haphazard industrial growth.

I will now give a brief description of the New York Regional Plan in which primary consideration was given to economic problems. The fact that conditions—physical, economic, social, and political—are very different in the United States from those in England has to be borne in mind ; but the difference does not mean that what has been done in New York is not of value in showing what should be done or, if you choose, what should not be done in London and other large cities in England.

NEW YORK REGIONAL PLAN.

The New York Regional Plan was prepared by a Committee of Citizens of the Region and financed by the Russell Sage Foundation. It was initiated by Charles D. Norton, who was one of the chief promoters of the great plan made for Chicago in 1907. As the plan had to deal with an area of 5,528 square miles, with parts in three sovereign states, and having over 400 municipal divisions, it was not considered practicable to bring about the co-operation necessary to have a plan made by any joint authority. Of necessity, therefore, only an advisory plan could be made by a committee having no public responsibility. In theory this might be assumed to condemn the plan as being likely to be a futile effort because of unwillingness of public authorities to accept outside advice. In practice it has been found that the plan has commanded widespread confidence in its proposals and is in process of being carried out to at least as great an extent as any official city plan in America.

As recently as 11th December, 1931, it was publicly accepted by the governors of New York, New Jersey and Connecticut as a combined pattern and " code of doctrine " for guidance of the communities in the metropolitan parts of the three States. While it has been in course of preparation several statutes have been passed to give effect to many of its ideas, and its reports have been quoted by Courts, including the Supreme Court of New York State, as a basis for decisions on matters of zoning.

Unquestionably the confidence obtained has been largely due to the fact that the scope of the survey included the investigation of major economic activities and that its proposals took into consideration the best methods of developing these activities in the interest of both public and private welfare. An Association of Citizens formed to keep the plan alive and promote its fuller acceptance by public authorities has as its president a man who was formerly President of the Board of Aldermen and Chairman of the City Transit Commission ; as the Chairman of its Board the former Chairman of the Port of New York Authority ; and as the Chairman of a Committee to raise funds, the President of the New York Edison Company. Thus politics, rapid transit, railways, shipping and public utilities are all represented among its leaders.

The plan has been made by various stages at a cost of about £250,000 over a period of nine years. Prior to the autumn of 1923 preliminary studies were made by Nelson P. Lewis, formerly chief engineer of the City of New York, Mr. Raymond Unwin of London, and a group of six city planners comprising five Americans with myself as chairman. These studies were made with the object of defining the area to be planned and the problems to be dealt with. Since October, 1923, when I took over the duty of general director, an able staff of assistants and a number of eminent architects, engineers and economists have collaborated in carrying out the survey and making the plan.

The preliminary surveys also included a mathematical study of the probable growth of population. The population of the region in 1920 was 8,979,055. It was predicted that this would increase to over 11 millions in 1930 and 21 millions in 1965-70. The actual figures in 1930 were 11,497,198, with strong tendencies towards dispersal from central areas to the environs.

Here are a few facts of importance:—

(1) The Region has 1,800 miles of water front and about the same mileage of railway.

(2) It has over 34,000 factories.

(3) In 1929 the City of New York alone had 282,672 single-family dwellings (44·3 per cent.) ; 151,515 two-family dwellings (23·8 per cent.) ; 125,656 tenements blocks (19·7 per cent.) ; 4,570 elevator apartment blocks (0·7 per cent.) ; 10,727 warehouses (1·7 per cent.) ; 1,396 office buildings (0·2 per cent.) ; 6,968 factories (1·1 per cent.) ; 22,801 garages and stables (3·6 per cent.) ; 593 theatres (0·1 per cent.) ; and 30,629 special structures (4·8 per cent.).

(4) The approximate valuations of different types of buildings were—

Residential buildings ...	1,332,000,000
Warehouses, offices, factories, and other structures ...	766,000,000
	£2,098,000,000

Even in Manhattan with its extensive business use and high values of skyscraper office buildings, residential values were about equal to business values.

(5) The greatest average height of building was in Manhattan, south of Fulton Street, where it averaged 10·7 storeys per unit area of building, but only 8·4 storeys if the heights were uniform over the whole of the occupied land. The area of land covered by these buildings was only 48·1 per cent. of the gross.

(6) In 1925, 86 per cent. of New York City's population was concentrated on the 97 square miles served by rapid transit, and 14 per cent. on the other 200 square miles. (On the whole it is found that high concentration in one place does not result in raising the average density over the whole city, as compared with the metropolitan area of London with less concentration in central areas ; also that skyscrapers had not resulted in raising heights and bulks on the average over a wide area. The average height of building in Manhattan is still below six storeys, and as most of its streets are from 60 to 100 feet wide, it has probably less cubical contents per square foot of street than exists in a similar area of central London.

(7) The economic factor that imposes a limit on building height is transportation (chiefly transit).

Whether a building pays or not depends on whether the facilities of access to and from the building are adequate, and can be made permanently adequate. There is no objection to skyscraper towers, but only to cubical contents or bulk of building exceeding that which can be served with light and means of transportation. So long as the Empire State Building—over 1,200 feet in height—is isolated from other high buildings, it can obtain more light than low buildings, and sufficient space for the traffic it creates. Unfortunately high buildings destroy each other by crowding close together.

(8) The area of public open space in the Region in 1927 was 90,000 acres, but many thousands of acres have since been acquired.

There are a thousand facts of a similar nature set forth in the volumes of the survey, but I am able to mention only a few.

The study of the region by experts proceeded during 1923 to 1927 in the following sections:—

(1) Economic factors in metropolitan arrangement, including space requirements and distribution of industry, and their relation to transportation.

(2) Distribution of population and land values, and the problems of government.

(3) Major transportation—docks, railways, and transit lines.

(4) Highway traffic.

(5) Public recreation.

(6) Buildings, their uses and the spaces about them.

(7) The planning of land and development of neighbourhood units.

(8) Physical conditions and public services.

While these studies were being carried out a legal department drafted laws for the Governments of the three States, and several of these laws were passed.

I can give only a summary of the contents of the plan, which was prepared with a view to guiding prospective developments up to 1965. It is published in two volumes. One contains an atlas of the whole region and proposals for—

(a) A system of trunk-line railways co-ordinated with a system of suburban rapid transit.

(b) Waterways, harbours and ship canals.

(c) Regional highway system including speedways and parkways.

(d) Air transportation system.

(e) Land uses and regional zoning, including designation of close and open development areas ; areas for industry, business, residence, and open spaces; areas for private estates, forests, cultivation ; submerged areas to be reclaimed, beaches to be preserved and developed, &c.

All these things were considered in perspective and relation for the whole region, having regard to expected growth over a period of 35 years. Laws relating to application of the plans and methods of meeting the cost of carrying them out were discussed.

The second volume treats of the building of the cities in the region. An indication of the contents of this volume is given in the followings list of its chapters, which are illustrated by over 400 plans, diagrams, drawings, and photographs:—

(1) City building in a democracy ;

(2) Civic art in relation to street planning and architecture ;

(3) Civic art in relation to work and living conditions;

(4) Beauty and reality in civic art ;

(5) Individuality of communities and their common problems ;
(6) Planning land for building ;
(7) Zoning—principles and practice ;
(8) Houses and housing neighbourhoods ;
(9) Improvement of terminal facilities ;
(10) Fitting streets to buildings ;
(11) Scope and character of opportunities ;
(12) In down-town and mid-town Manhattan ;
(13) In upper Manhattan and the Bronx ;
(14) In Brooklyn, Queens and Staten Island ;
(15) In metropolitan New Jersey ;
(16) In the environs ;
Proposed plans
(17) The end and the beginning.

The most difficult task with which I was confronted was to develop a set of principles and suggest what would be desirable heights and densities of buildings in central areas. The most striking feature of the plan is the extent to which it has brought about co-operation between 400 municipalities in three States and stimulated them to action in putting its proposals into effect. The most valuable features it contains for emulation in this country are: First, its bold and comprehensive treatment of fundamental economic problems, and, second, its illustrations of the practicability of developing wide parkways to serve jointly the needs of traffic, protect amenities on abutting land, and provide access to new residential areas and spaces for recreation.

It is impossible to describe the plan within the scope of a Paper or without graphic illustration.*

* The Paper was illustrated at this point with a series of lantern views.

The following is a quotation from the final chapter of what is actually the twelfth volume of the survey and plan:—

> " Our visions are visions of hope and not of prophecy as to what the future holds. Change will be governed by the uneven temper and intelligence of the average man and woman. What they desire strongly and not what the regional planners ask shall come to pass.
> " While the New York Region of the future will never be exactly as we have pictured, we feel confident that it will grow more in harmony with our conception than with that of those who dream either of the concentrated skyscraper city with extensive systems of double-deck streets, or of a greatly diffused city region with a garden for every home. Upward and outward growth will continue together. The cost of doing things will continue to be the test of whether they will be done."

Finally, it is pointed out that the chief difficulty in New York is not the lack of individual wisdom but that of expressing individual wisdom in collective action. That, too, is the crux of the problem in England.

At the present time perhaps the greatest need as an aid to planning for the future is to obtain a survey of transportation and industrial distribution in the United Kingdom for purposes of their co-ordination with the highway plans of the Ministry of Transport and the national plan being followed by the Central Electricity Board. Until such a survey is made, there cannot be adequate and proper consideration given to economic problems in regional and town planning schemes.

A DISCUSSION took place on Mr. THOMAS ADAMS' Paper entitled

REGIONAL PLANNING AND ECONOMY.

Sir THEODORE CHAMBERS, K.B.E. (Chartered Surveyor), in proposing a vote of thanks to Mr. Adams, said that he wanted to refer in particular to the Paper which had appeared in the "Transactions." He was not at all sure that the United States and New York were altogether a safe guide in this country. Anyone who had read Professor Siegfried's essay on "The Psychological Aspects of "Industry in the United States" would appreciate that economic conditions in America during the past fifty years enabled and, indeed, compelled people there to take certain action of a kind which was impracticable in Europe. In America they were able to think in terms of continuously rising markets and increasing wealth. The American people were full of an immense optimism, and thought nothing of writing off millions of dollars' worth of what we should consider real wealth because they believed that they could build up a still greater wealth in its place. The buildings of which photographs had been shown on the screen that evening were a picture, as it were, of the attitude of mind of the people of the United States.

In this country there was deep-rooted suspicion of town planning. It had been voiced, not very audibly perhaps, but nevertheless forcibly, by several Members of the House of Commons during the recent debate on the Town and Country Planning Bill. While he was not in full sympathy with the critics, he had to admit that they were expressing the views of the conservatively minded people of this country. Caution was, therefore, essential in England, and those who favoured statutory town planning had to do their utmost to convince the public that it was really worth while.

The point of view of the average business man was clearly put by Sir Josiah Stamp last year on an occasion when the experts were discussing planning. Sir Josiah said:

"Does planning pay?" His words echoed a question to which every business man wanted an answer.

He agreed with Mr. Adams that good planning properly carried out was calculated to pay. The question whom it paid, however, raised the issue which Mr. Adams had dealt with somewhat delicately in his Paper, namely, the advantages to the whole community, on the one hand, from greater efficiency and improved conditions and all those things which appeared at first to be immaterial, but which, in all probability, meant a great deal in the ultimate wealth-producing power of the race; and, on the other hand, the narrower question whether it would pay those who put their money into it and carried out the conditions which the plan laid down.

There could be no question that, in dealing with virgin areas and new developments, planning was calculated definitely to pay, both from the economic and from the sociological points of view. One had only to consider what planning purported to do. All that planning purported to do was to regulate development as though the land belonged to a prudent and public-spirited owner. Once a plan was established and given statutory force, the State merely acted as a policeman to prevent anything being done contrary to that plan.

Personally he did not think that the State's place in town planning could ever be more than negative. It was not the function of the State to act as an entrepreneur; it was not the function of the State to tell people what they should do with their own money; but it was, of course, the prerogative of the State to prevent people acting injuriously to their neighbours. Town planning was, in fact, only an extension of that theory. For a long time sanitary bye-laws and statutory provisions of all kinds had laid down what people should not do, and town planning was only carrying that process one stage further.

When one came to questions of electrical distribution, water supply, main drainage and traffic routes, it was only common-sense that some authority should lay down certain prohibitions. There was nothing politically subversive or contrary to precedent in that at all, and though some critics did suggest, perhaps reasonably, that if town planning was not well done it might be injurious and even check development, it was necessary to accept the major benefit and see that the minor evils did not arise.

It must, of course, be realised that many people were nervous of entrusting local authorities and their experts with powers the exercise of which might have serious consequences to those who were attempting to develop their property. He agreed entirely with Mr. Adams that the town planners should lay down as few restrictive conditions as possible, and that they should concentrate upon the points which were of real and principal importance.

Everyone would agree that, if the general consensus of opinion were that a certain road which at present had no outlet or an insufficient outlet for its traffic ought to be extended in a certain direction, even if it meant the ultimate demolition of houses standing on the site of the projected extension, it was right to say to the owners of the land, when the time came for redevelopment, that they should not build again on that land, which was to be retained as an open space and turned into a traffic route. Everybody would agree that that was entirely reasonable.

In regard to town planning of built-up areas an enormous amount of tact, judgment and foresight would be required. Sentiment and extravagance might lead authorities unwittingly to do a great deal that might be seriously uneconomic and destructive of values. He sometimes thought that it would be a valuable thing if some kind of general staff were set up, acting in a general advisory capacity and without statutory powers, to consider the broadest questions involved in the planning of the country. It could be seen quite plainly to-day that even this country was not by itself the true economic unit, but rather that the whole Empire was the economic unit to which they should look. Some were even beginning to see that the real economic unit was not less than that of the world itself. That was the trend of modern thought, and it seemed to him imperative that somehow or other the broadest vision should be brought to bear on the matter. Everyone must realise that the centralisation and movement of industry, and the movement of population, were going to become more and more questions on which some kind of general staff in the State would have to give views and assistance, and he felt with Mr. Thomas Adams that there should be a closer study of those broader aspects of planning. Whether that should be done by a private body, or an advisory body, or a statutory body, did not matter from the point of view from which the subject was being discussed at the moment.

Major R. HARDY SYMS (Chartered Surveyor), seconding, said that he had read every word of the Paper, and that their thanks were also due to Mr. Adams for the beautiful slides he had shown, and also for leaving out so much which the members were accustomed to hear ad nauseam about the law and statutory processes of town planning. In particular he wished to thank Mr. Adams very heartily for basing his main thought about regional planning on major economic activities. That wider aspect of town planning was, in his opinion, by far the most interesting. One often felt, when faced with the details of town planning work, that one could not see the wood for the trees, and was apt to lose sight of the real significance of the whole thing. It was interesting to compare the definition of economics by Professor Allyn Young, as quoted in the Paper, with the general objects of town planning as enunciated in the Town Planning Act. Professor Young's definition was wide and majestic compared with the limited objective named in the Act.

Mr. Adams had said that regional planning was evolved from town planning, which, in turn, had first been introduced as a branch of housing. That was historically correct, and was a typical example of the way in which they put the cart before the horse. For, to carry that a little further, from regional planning, as Sir Theodore Chambers had said, national planning naturally grew, and it was surely from the national angle that all big planning principles should be viewed in the first instance. Thus the field of operations grew larger and larger until one realised that, in studying one region, one had also to examine the economic activities of the other regions round it. Otherwise one was liable to draw wrong deductions. Ultimately, therefore, one arrived at the wider aspect of the whole thing which could be described as world planning.

That might sound fantastic and impossible, but even now international co-operation was becoming necessary in many different fields, for example in the running and scheduling of Trans-Continental trains. Roads, airways, the position of aerodromes, air ports, sea ports, and so on, were all great public matters which required to be considered, or would require to be considered, from a national and international standpoint.

Dr. RAYMOND UNWIN (President of the R.I.B.A.), supporting the vote of thanks, agreed with Mr. Adams that it was necessary to adopt broad economic considerations as a basis of planning. The endeavour should be to plan a basis for a convenient, efficient and happy life for a community. He thought that was the matter which came first and foremost, and care was necessary not to be led astray by details before the broad considerations had been laid down.

He thought it inevitable that in this country they should begin to plan from the wrong end. They were new to planning, and they had to learn the details first, to know the parts before they began to put them together.

With regard to the advantages of planning, he would like to supplement what Sir Theodore Chambers had said. It had always seemed to him that planning through an authority had a great advantage for landowners, since it put them more nearly in the advantageous position of an owner who owned all the land.

In places like Eastbourne and Buxton, where the whole of the land was owned by a single owner, the Duke of Devonshire's advisers had been able to plan the whole area comprehensively, and to allocate suitable areas for industrial purposes and reserve other areas for different classes of residential development. That was clearly advantageous both to the Duke and to the public. With town planning, the interests of the public and the interests of the owners were, broadly speaking, identical. If the planning was sound, the public would pay the landowners more rent for the privilege of living in the town. That was the broad economic principle which had to be borne in mind.

The difficulties which arose in town planning in most cases were not between the public and the owners, but were difficulties between different owners rather than between owners and the public.

He firmly believed that planning in built-up areas would confer enormous benefit upon owners. One had only to consider the Ladbroke Grove Estate to see how true that was. As they probably knew, that estate was planned by a great owner. It retained its value and its character to-day. The planning ended, he supposed, at the original boundary of the estate. Round that boundary one had only to look at the map of London to see what a hopeless confusion had arisen and how great was the need for reconstruction. So true was it that planning was an advantage, that it would be found ten times easier to provide for modern conditions of traffic and shops and buildings, and everything else in those areas which were planned 100 years ago, than would be the case in any area which had been allowed to grow up anyhow, each man planning his own small plot in his own small way. He ventured to think that would be found to be true of any part of London.

The fact was that, in cases where an ownership map looked like a jigsaw puzzle, it was not possible for any one individual to plan to his own best advantage. It was only by planning the whole as a whole that one could realise what was best for all the different interests. Although Mr.

Smith might think that he could make more money tomorrow by devoting his own land to some purpose which would be injurious to Jones's land on one side and Robinson's on the other, it was still true that, if they did what was best for the whole of the area, Mr. Smith, Mr. Jones and Mr. Robinson would all benefit in the long run.

The problem was how to plan in the public interest without unfairness to the interests of the owners concerned and without too heavy expense on the public purse. To enable all to share the advantage which would be secured if one owner controlled the whole area was the real aim.

How far it was possible to do something by advisory work and how far by statutory was an interesting question. He agreed with Mr. Adams that there was opening for both methods, but he thought that what Sir Theodore Chambers said was also true, namely, that the differences between America and England were very considerable. He had not yet seen any prospect of raising voluntarily a sum like £250,000 for carrying out advisory planning for the City of London ; and the City of London contained about the same population as the region with which Mr. Adams had dealt. He thought in this country it would be necessary to do things in a different way. The fact that in America it was not possible to carry out the work on statutory lines, forced them, as Sir Theodore Chambers had said, to do it voluntarily ; and the problem to-day was how to secure the necessary co-ordination and the necessary minimum of compulsion to prevent the individual blocking projects which the majority wanted to carry through. The question was how to do that, and how to secure the major developments on a scale adequate to their activities and their life, while securing to individuals sufficient scope and freedom for the exercise of their individuality and enterprise. That was a problem inherent in planning which would take some time to solve satisfactorily.

Mr. I. G. Gibbon, c.b., c.b.e. (Assistant Secretary, Ministry of Health), said that it gave him great pleasure to express his appreciation of the work which had been carried out by Mr. Thomas Adams. Mr. Thomas Adams had one foot in London and another in New York ; he stode the Atlantic. He ought to be an interpreter of one country to the other, and, in particular, to interpret to them and to bring before them the very interesting contrast between his experience in the United States and in their own country.

He was glad to see that all the speakers had at least paid a tribute to what he had always regarded as the fundamental fact of planning, namely, that if it did not pay as a sheer matter of business it would not succeed. It was the measure in which planning would actually contribute to the real wealth of the country which determined the issue.

Mr. Thomas Adams had dealt with transportation, and one of the lessons of the development which proceeded during the era of the industrial revolution, and which was to be learned from what was happening round London now, was the enormous amount of money which had been thrown away because matters were not so arranged as to secure for industry all necessary facilities for transport, and that at less cost to the community. He thought it was lamentable that in 1932, whereas we had what was probably the best example of industrial site planning in the whole world at Trafford Park, the one modern instance of industrial site planning depended on the sheer accident of a war relic ; he referred to Slough. There, there were enormous possibilities of planning paying from a strictly business standpoint. So far as Trafford Park was concerned, those who knew Manchester and the district around about would agree that the area owned an enormous amount to Trafford Park. It had made all the difference to Manchester.

As Dr. Unwin and others were aware, he had always urged that the fundamentals of planning rested not even with architects and not even with surveyors or engineers. The foundation work was what elsewhere he had ventured to describe as social geography. Social conditions and social and economic forces, which really determined development. The wise plan, as in so many other things, was first to understand the forces which governed human development and, knowing them, to turn them to the greatest advantage. One of the things which had appealed to him most in regard to the work done in the New York Regional Survey was the economic basis on which it had all been founded.

He entirely agreed with Mr. Adams that, however wide might be the scope of statutory planning, there was ample room also for advisory work. One of the defects in this country—there were historical reasons for it—was that such things as railways stood so much outside planning schemes. It was not practicable to bring them into statutory schemes, though there was a provision in the present Bill which might help a little in that direction. A great deal could be done on advisory lines, however, and he thought and hoped that that side of the work would be developed.

Planning could never be a matter for the public authority. It concerned the whole community, and the business community in particular. In one way they were sadly behind the United States, in that they had not yet managed to persuade a sufficient majority of the business interests of the country to take an active interest in it. He would appeal to the members of The Institution to help in that direction. They had been of much assistance to the Ministry. He hoped that The Institution would take an active part, from the business standpoint, in planning in the future, and would do all it could to bring actively into planning work all the other business interests with which it had so much influence.

The PRESIDENT said that he wished from the Chair to express to Mr. Thomas Adams the thanks of The Institution for his very interesting Paper. Members might not, perhaps, appreciate what a colossal piece of work Mr. Adams had undertaken for New York, and he would like to read an extract from the report of a meeting which took place on December 11th last, when the New York Regional Planning Final Report was adopted. On that occasion the President at the end of the speech said this:—

> " City planning in the sense that we know it is comparatively new. That the physical planning of a great area like New York involves great economic questions goes without saying. The late Dwight W. Morrow said in a speech only two or three days before he died that there was a great deal of talk about the cost of planning, but he suggested in his quiet and persuasive way that nobody yet had written a book on the cost of not planning. There is not a thoughtful and informed citizen in New York, or, for that matter, in any other city, who does not know that great and costly mistakes involving many millions of dollars have been made through unplanned, ill-planned, or hastily planned action. Mr. Adams, the director of our work, does not put the plan forward as something which will never be deviated from. We believe that it is based upon the most thorough study of the subject that has ever been made in any city.
> " When the Committee was seeking professional assistance it reached out over the whole world, and chose Mr. Thomas Adams of London (and Scotland) to direct the technical staff preparing the plan. We have never had occasion to regret that choice. Mr. Adams served as General Director from 1923 to 1929, when he resigned to continue as our consultant. It was Mr. Adams' task as General Director to determine the direction and scope of inquiries to be made, to utilise the best assistance obtainable, and to study and co-ordinate the findings of all the investigators and planners in a unified whole. The fact-finding volumes and the two volumes of plans and recommendations which you see here are the tangible and enduring evidence of his labours. The volume which is being published to-night is peculiarly his individual work."

Mr. Adams had given some idea of the scope covered by that volume that evening, and he wanted to emphasise how much The Institution was indebted to him for his Paper and for his account of the stupendous work he had carried out.

The vote of thanks was carried by acclamation.

Mr. THOMAS ADAMS, in reply, said he was very grateful to the members for their cordial expression of thanks. He had had to choose between reading the Paper, which he knew would be available to those interested in printed form, and showing and describing some slides illustrating his work in New York. He had chosen the latter course because he thought it would be the more interesting. The illustrations were American, but the Paper was written from the English point of view. In his opinion it was undesirable to lay too much stress upon the difference between English and American conditions. There were many things in America which we ought to avoid, as well as others which we could emulate with advantage. He deprecated the excuses which were constantly put forward to justify inactivity along some lines he had indicated, on the ground that English conditions differed from the American. He would like them to consider what this country had lost as a result of its delay in dealing scientifically and properly with electricity, to which he had referred in his Paper.

The question of the need of town planning was not at issue, but differences of opinion existed as to method, and he had tried that evening to urge the necessity for more co-ordination of the economic with the social and æsthetic elements in town planning schemes. He was very grateful to The Institution for permitting him to present the Paper, and to those present for the way in which it had been received.

CAUSES, CONSEQUENCE AND CURE OF DAMP IN BUILDINGS.

By R. Fitzmaurice, B.Sc., A.M.Inst.C.E. of the Building Research Station, Department of Scientific and Industrial Research.

To be read at the Ordinary General Meeting of The Chartered Surveyors' Institution on Monday, 7th March, 1932.

The design of buildings, considered purely from the structural point of view, has reached a stage where materials can be used with reasonable economy and the dangers of collapse are very remote. This has been made possible by scientific investigation of the strength of materials and theoretical study of the basic principles involved in the stability of structures. The designer of a structure can determine within reasonable limits the loads which his materials can bear and in his design he adopts some more or less arbitrary " factor of safety." In addition to stability, however, the ability of a building to retain heat and exclude the weather must be considered. When the question of damp penetration is examined, however, we find that a far less satisfactory state of affairs exists. There is a certain element of doubt as to the ability of a given form of construction to exclude damp, and cases of damp penetration are very numerous. It is very desirable that the question of exclusion of moisture from our buildings should be reduced to a rational basis, and that a " factor of safety," from the point of view of damp penetration, should be in general use. Before this can be achieved, however, it is essential to acquire knowledge of the fundamental properties of the materials of building in respect of their behaviour in contact with moisture. Work of this nature is in progress at the Building Research Station and in laboratories in other countries ; knowledge is gradually accumulating, although much remains to be done. The way in which the solution of the damp penetration problem will finally be found is still conjectural. It is quite conceivable that we may even be forced to discard some of our present materials and methods of construction.

If a modern building were to collapse, the designers and builders would, very rightly, suffer in pocket and reputation, and it must be the object of those concerned in the science of building to advance knowledge to the state where serious penetration of moisture is an equally discreditable event.

The consequences of damp in buildings are so numerous and involved that space will not permit of anything more than a catalogue of some of the ills which are directly attributable to damp penetration. The following come to mind as perhaps some of the most persistent nuisances:—

Dry-rot fungus attack of timber ;
Moulds and mildew ;
Paint failures of all kinds ;
Efflorescences and deterioration of plasters ;
Discolouration of decorations.

How damp conditions may be a menace to the health and well-being of the building inmates is a matter on which medical authorities alone can express an opinion ; but it is probably safe to say that in so far as damp walls are in general conducive to colder conditions within a house, they may form a contributory factor to the ill health of occupants.

In this very brief contribution to the subject it is proposed to discuss, first, the mechanism of the movement of water in building materials, and then to deal with the application of the fundamental principles to the practical requirements of the building structure. The cure of damp conditions in any given case can be best undertaken when the fundamental causes are kept clearly in mind.

BEHAVIOUR OF WATER IN CONTACT WITH BUILDING MATERIALS.

1. Structure of materials.

The phenomena observed when water comes in contact with a material depend on the structure of the material, and particularly on the dimensions and distribution of the voids or pores within it.

Most of the materials which form the external shell of our buildings have a porous structure ; the size and distribution of the pores vary greatly in different materials, and in any one material uniformity of pore size is very rare.

A very rough classification of materials in respect of their pore structure is attempted below:—

- (a) Porous. Containing pores of various sizes. Bricks, tiles, some natural stones, concretes and mortars.
- (b) Fine pored. Some natural stones, some slates, dense concretes and mortars.
- (c) Non-porous. Glass, vitreous glazes, some slates, metals and films of bitumen applied hot.
- (d) Intermediate between fine pored and non-porous. Films of paint and cellulose, films of emulsions of oils and bitumens. It is typical of these materials that in many cases water is unable to pass through them in the liquid state, but they may be permeable to water vapour.

2. Movement of moisture in porous materials.

It is a matter of common observation that many porous bodies if placed in contact with a liquid will cause some of the liquid to be drawn into their pores. This property of porous materials is made use of in a variety of common-place articles such as sponges, blotting-paper, and lamp wicks. The phenomena associated with the movement of moisture into the pores of a material are variously referred to as " suction," " capillary attraction," " absorption, " &c.," and an understanding of their mechanism is likely to be helpful.

Surface tension.—Essentially this absorption of a liquid depends upon a property known as " surface tension."

The simplest illustration of the operation of forces of surface tension is that of a fine-bored glass tube dipping into a vessel containing water. The water will be observed to rise against the force of gravity to some definite height depending on the internal diameter of the tube. Water will rise higher in tubes of smaller diameter, and this is of importance when we come to consider the suction forces exerted by materials of different pore size. It will be observed that the free surface of the water in our tube is curved, and is concave upwards ; this is characteristic of a liquid which will " wet " the solid. If we substitute mercury for water in our vessel, it will be found that the free surface of the liquid in the glass tube assumes a curved form convex upwards and is depressed below the general level of the mercury in the vessel. This is characteristic of a liquid which does not wet the solid. The important fact to be noted here is that many of our materials of building are readily wetted by water, and, therefore, the surface tension forces exerted in their pores tend to draw moisture into the materials.

The curvature of the free surface of the liquid has already been referred to, and the state of pressure across the free surface can be related mathematically to the degree of curvature.

It should be noted that the pores of our materials do not assume the form of straight uniform tubes, and for this reason the capillary phenomena exerted are not amenable to simple measurements and calculation, but the degree of curvature will still determine the forces causing movement of the water in porous materials even when the water is discontinuous.

3. Absorption of water by building materials.

If we now apply this principle to a dry material having a porous capillary structure, it is evident that when the material is placed in contact with water it will absorb the water by capillary forces until all the capillaries are filled or until some restraining force comes into operation. In the case of a dry material drawing moisture upwards from a reservoir or from damp ground, the restraining force will be the action of gravity on the column of liquid which has been raised. When the capillaries are filled, and the material is saturated, capillary forces cease to have effect, but if we now have some external force such as a hydrostatic pressure due to a head of water, or wind pressure, water will continue to flow through the capillary channels under the action of the external force unless some further restraining force is brought into operation.

It is then necessary to consider the " rate of flow " of moisture. This rate of flow depends on two factors: (a) the magnitude of the external force, and (b) the frictional resistance to flow in the pores of the material.

Up to the present we have based our arguments on the assumption that the water which is moving in our material is continuous, in which case the measurement of the suction force which the material can exert is simple ; actually, however, this will rarely be the case since the pores of building materials are not uniform tubes, and in many cases the structure would approximate more closely to an assemblage of spherical particles.

In a porous medium which is not completely saturated with water the column of liquid may not be continuous, and the measurement of the suction which a moist material can exert on water becomes much more difficult. This is discussed at some length in the " Annual Report of the Building Research Board for the year 1929."* But the essential fact to be borne in mind is that a material in which the water is held discontinuously will still exert a suction force, the force will be determined as before by the curvature of the surfaces of the droplets held in the material. These forces will still produce a movement of water, although at a reduced rate, the transfer of water from droplet to droplet being effected either by distillation or by movement in thin films of molecular dimensions existing on the drier areas of the particles of which the material is composed.

*H.M. Stationery Office, price 2*s*. 6*d*. net.

When different materials are placed in contact a uniformly fine-pored material will draw water from a uniformly large-pored material because the capillary suction is greater in small pores than in larger ones. But building materials contain pores of various sizes, and, consequently, the suction force will vary with the moisture content. In fact the relative pore structures may even be such that the direction of movement of water between two particular materials alters with change in the degree of saturation.

Under static conditions equilibrium is established between two materials in contact when their capillary suctions are equal. That is to say water will distribute itself until the suction forces are exerted by pores of the same dimensions on either side of the boundary. In buildings, however, the moisture content of materials is continually varying, and the problem is therefore dynamic and not static. Since the capillary suction of a material varies with its moisture content, and the rate of change of moisture content, under wetting or drying conditions, varies with different materials, the problem of predicting the direction of transfer of water between any two materials is extremely complex.

5. Evaporation of moisture.

If moisture can at all times be removed by evaporation from walls or floors of our buildings as fast as capillary forces can bring it to the surface, many of the more objectionable characteristics of damp penetration may be suppressed. Other troubles such as efflorescences may arise, but, considered purely from the point of view of damp penetration, the drying conditions are of importance.

The rate of evaporation of moisture is influenced by the following factors:—

> (1) The relative humidity of the air. The amount of water which the air can contain, as vapour depends upon temperature. The relative humidity of air at any given temperature is usually expressed as a percentage of the maximum possible quantity of water vapour which the air could contain at that temperature.
> (2) The ventilation conditions, i.e., the ability of the moisture-laden air to move away from the damp surface.

Evaporation of moisture is much reduced in the absence of adequate heating and ventilation. If the same forms of construction are used in two buildings, it is quite conceivable that damp troubles will arise if one of the buildings is inadequately heated and badly ventilated, whereas the other building may be free from trouble. The week-end cottage and other buildings used for occasional occupation are very difficult to deal with.

6. Condensation of atmospheric moisture.

Air at any given temperature is able to contain a certain definite quantity of water vapour as a maximum ; when this maximum quantity of water vapour is present, the air is said to be saturated. If the air is in a condition approaching saturation, a fall in temperature will render it unable to contain the same amount of water vapour, and the surplus vapour will assume the liquid form and will be deposited as " condensed moisture." It will be seen therefore that the essential condition for condensation of atmospheric moisture is a reduction in temperature of air laden with water vapour. Sudden changes of atmospheric temperature and humidity often occur in this country, and at such times condensation effects are liable to be conspicuous. So far as the building is concerned, it usually happens that a cold surface chills the air in its immediate vicinity and moisture is deposited ; the nature of the various surfaces plays an important part in determining whether condensation is objectionable or not. Many of the lining materials in common use have a somewhat absorbent surface and can absorb the condensed moisture as it is deposited ; absorbent linings of this kind can often prevent the visible and objectionable phenomenon of drops and streamlets of moisture. On impervious surfaces condensed moisture will almost inevitably be found to appear at certain times and seasons.

7. Water repellence.

If we consider the simple case of the surface-tension forces exerted when a glass tube dips into water, it can be shown that application of a film of grease to the bore of the glass tube will result in an alteration of the curvature assumed by the water in the tube, and if the alteration is sufficient, the water will no longer wet the tube. If the tube be dipped into water, the level of the water in the tube will be depressed below the general water level, and, in effect, the capillary forces are reversed. We state then that the capillary has become water repellent. This phenomenon is important when at a later stage we have to consider the action of surface waterproofing materials.

THE PROBLEM OF THE EXCLUSION OF DAMP UNDER PRACTICAL BUILDING CONDITIONS.

It has been shown that very many of the materials of building have a porous structure in which capillary forces are exerted. In addition, most of these materials are of a kind which are readily wetted by water. It follows, therefore, that when we use materials of this kind, the only certain method of ensuring that moisture is not to be transmitted from the exterior of the building to the inner linings lies in providing a definite break to the capillary path for moisture. It will be found that the great majority of cases of damp penetration are directly attributable to neglect to observe this rule.

As a convenient sub-division it is proposed to deal with the problem of damp exclusion under four headings:—

(1) Damp rising from the ground ;
(2) Damp passing through the roof ;
(3) Damp passing through the walls ;
(4) Condensation.

1. EXCLUSION OF GROUND MOISTURE.

Unless it is intended to go so far underground that the basements are below the level of standing water in the ground it is our custom to do what we can to reduce the amount of moisture arising from the site, but it is unusual to proceed to the length of providing a complete break in the capillary path. Different sites vary enormously, and a particular method of construction may be quite all right in one case, but may fail deplorably in another.

It is reasonable to assume that the less moisture there is under our building the less likelihood there is of it rising through floors and foundation concrete. If, of course, the ground is actually waterlogged there may be " head " effects in addition to capillary movement, and this suggests that site drainage is well worth while. A modest expenditure is likely to yield a valuable return in freedom from troubles of a kind which are difficult to remedy. It is not unusual to find that building operations have entirely dislocated an existing system of land drains, and that no attempt has been made to provide any alternative. In two cases investigated by the writer where very serious outbreaks of dry-rot had occurred in ground floors it was evident that ground drainage was defective.

Space does not permit of discussion of the problem of excluding damp from basements and other excavations. It should rightly be dealt with here, but it is a highly specialised subject and cannot be dismissed briefly.

Sub-floor paving and ventilation.

The treatment of the sub-floor area is of importance ; bye-laws frequently demand a layer of Portland cement concrete of specified thickness. If this layer of concrete could be made sufficiently dense to fall in the category of very fine-pored materials it would undoubtedly be valuable, but, unfortunately, the art of building does not at present extend to the preparation of really dense concretes under normal conditions. It has been mentioned that concrete possesses a porous structure and can absorb a considerable amount of moisture by capillary forces, so that if placed directly on damp ground the concrete will become saturated. The most satisfactory method of breaking the capillary path of moisture to the surface concrete is by the provision of a layer of non-capillary material below the concrete, and for this purpose large ballast or hard-broken brick is likely to be satisfactory. In order to possess non-capillary properties it is essential to eliminate the fine material. Hard core, consisting of broken brick in all states of sub-division, with old mortar and other refuse, is absolutely useless from the point of view of moisture absorption although it may make a good firm bed for the concrete. It should be realised, however, that in waterlogged sites the provision of this non-capillary layer under the concrete will fail in its purpose, since a " head " of water in the surrounding soil will cause it to act merely as a sump ; in such soils it should obviously be employed in conjunction with sub-soil drainage.

With the utmost care which we can reasonably be expected to exercise, some moisture will probably be found to reach the surface of our site concrete, and where a timber joist and board floor is to be used, it is essential to provide adequate ventilation in order to ensure that the air below the timber floor is not constantly in a state approaching saturation. This ventilation is of paramount importance from the point of view of the prevention of dry-rot attack. A hole opening into an enclosed space is not ventilation, and it is desirable to ensure that there is an air path right through the building. Where the air path is interrupted by solid floors, it is desirable to provide air channels of generous dimensions below the solid floors ; this can be done conveniently by means of drain pipes. Air inlets, especially those in the form of bricks, should be considered in the light of their merits as ventilators as well as from the point of view of strength. Some types, strong and well made, have a very inadequate clear opening, and in a very bad outbreak of dry-rot in a housing estate it was found that the actual clear opening of the air-bricks used was less than 3 square inches per brick.*

Damp-proof courses.

In order to prevent the capillary rise of ground moisture in our walls, it is necessary to insert a damp-proof course of material which will either prevent completely the passage of moisture or will allow penetration to proceed so slowly that the amount of moisture transmitted in any given period is negligible. The materials at present available are—

(a) Vitreous materials such as certain types of tile or good blue bricks set in dense mortar ;

(b) Courses of very close, fine-grained material, such as slate-breaking joint, and set in dense mortar ;

(c) Metal sheeting ;

(d) Bituminous preparations.

It is rare to find that any trouble arises when either of the first two types of damp-proof course material are used. It is sometimes stated that slates are liable to crack if any settlement occurs, but it would be expected that serious damp penetration would rarely arise from this cause, and the consequences of a limited amount of cracking are not likely to be very disastrous.

---

*"Forest Products Research, Bulletin No. 1: Dry-rot in "Wood." (H.M. Stationery Office, price 1*s*. 6*d*. net.)

Sheet metals, in reasonably heavy gauges, are ideal for damp-course work apart from the risk of corrosion. Lead is in many ways a desirable material, but unless adequately protected is liable to corrode rapidly in contact with cement, mortars and concretes.* Copper is used extensively for damp-proof-course work in America and should be admirably suited for the purpose.

Bituminous preparations, although in the main sufficiently impervious for all normal requirements, may be troublesome in some respects. Bitumen has the characteristics of a viscous fluid, and unless loaded with a suitable filler is liable to flow too readily under a superimposed load. Thus with certain types of bituminous damp-course material, the extrusion of bitumen from the joint is not an uncommon event. A further trouble which has been reported in a number of cases is that walls may slide bodily on the damp-proof course. In choosing a material of this kind it is important to ensure that the bitumen will not squeeze out under load and that the wall will not slide on the damp-course, bearing in mind also that the viscosity of all bitumens is reduced by heat. Certain of the bitumen felts appear to be comparatively immune from the dangers of squeezing and sliding, but in the absence of any formal specifications it is difficult to discriminate between these materials, ranging, as they do, from tarred paper to a felt of good quality impregnated and coated with carefully selected bitumens.

Whilst dealing with damp-proof courses, there is one very persistent type of failure which is worth mention. It is quite common to find that a break in the capillary path for ground moisture has been carefully secured by the insertion of a good damp-proof course ; but at the same time an alternative capillary path has been inadvertently provided. This happens most frequently in the case of an internal partition wall with a hollow timber floor on one side and a solid concrete or tiled floor on the other.

*" Building Research, Bulletin No. 6: The Prevention of "Corrosion of Lead in Buildings." (H.M. Stationery Office, price 4*d*. net.)

The section shown above indicates the form of construction in question ; the position of the damp-proof course is determined by the position of the timber plate, and, as a general rule, it will be found that the filling under the concrete floor is in contact with the wall above the damp-proof course. This provides a capillary path for ground moisture shown by the arrows in the diagram. If the building site happens to be a damp one, there is every likelihood that trouble will arise in the form of a damp patch low down on the wall, or dry-rot in plates and joist ends of the hollow floor. There are, of course, very many variations which can occur on this theme.

2. Roofs and Roof Coverings.

The troubles to which roofs are liable are not as a rule very obscure ; there are, however, a few points which merit discussion, notably with regard to tiled roofs. Many tiles in common use have a porous structure, and in times of prolonged rain penetration of moisture would occur if it were not for the fact that the tiles are not in intimate capillary contact with each other. It appears that penetration of moisture is liable to occur in certain cases if this fact is disregarded. Thus if tiles are bedded in mortar at the verges of gable walls, it sometimes happens that moisture passes into the wall from the tiles and a damp patch appears on the wall.

The art of plain roof-tiling is founded on tradition, but it will be observed that the traditional methods do actually prevent the intimate contact of tiles with each other, and with the supporting timbers, in a very effective manner. If, however, torching of porous mortar is applied to the underside of the tiles, we immediately get intimate contact with the timbers and wet tiles. The desirability of torching is a controversial matter, but on the evidence so far available it appears to be a bad practice from the point of view of damp penetration, and has a definitely pernicious effect on the weathering of some types of tile, particularly those of the kind which tend to laminate by frost action.

An experimental roof has been erected at the Building Research Station on which the effects of flat and steep pitches, torching and omission of torching, are under observation on a variety of types of tile. Although the roof has been erected for the short space of only two years, interesting results are already available, and marked deterioration of certain types of tile has already occurred on torched areas.

The pitch of a tiled roof is, of course, an important factor from the point of view of damp penetration. A good example of this was afforded in the case of a roof which was examined. A Roman tile is manufactured in a certain district, and on roofs of normal pitch gave perfectly satisfactory results. In one instance where an elevation, rather Italian in character, had been aimed at, the roof of a house had been tiled at a flat pitch of about 25 degrees, with the result that serious moisture penetration occurred, and it was necessary to remove the tiles and fix boarding and felt.

A certain amount of trouble arises from penetration through chimney-stacks. A porous brick stack will absorb moisture in times of heavy rain, and the moisture will percolate down the stack under the combined forces of capillarity and gravity. If the rain is of sufficient duration the moisture will appear on the chimney-breasts in the upper inhabited rooms, and actually this is quite a common trouble in bad seasons. On exposed sites in districts where heavy rain occurs it would be very desirable to provide a damp-proof course in the stacks just below roof level.

3. Penetration of Moisture through Walls.

This, unfortunately, is a very common trouble, and every prolonged spell of bad weather brings to the Information Bureau of the Building Research Station a considerable number of reports of penetration through walls.

Exposure.

The severity of exposure to the weather is a very important factor influencing the penetration of moisture. This is a factor which it is almost impossible to define accurately. With a good eaves projection on a sheltered site a particular type of wall may be perfectly satisfactory ; transfer it to a situation where the exposure is severe, near the sea, or on an open hillside, and penetration may occur every winter. Where the conditions of exposure are generally recognised to be severe, it will be found that local custom provides for the adverse conditions, and special precautions are taken to obtain a damp-resisting wall. The line of demarcation between severe and normal exposure cannot be defined, and, presumably, it is the border-line cases where trouble arises. Another important point is the fact that the worst weather conditions occur only at comparatively infrequent intervals. The winter of 1929-30 was a particularly bad time ; there were weeks of heavy rain and high winds with few intermissions of good-drying weather, and in many buildings the weak spots were revealed for the first time during that period. It may be argued that very severe conditions are exceptional, but they are always liable to occur at some time in the life of a building, and a properly designed and constructed building should be capable of withstanding the worst weather.

The problem of the damp resistance of a wall is complicated. Penetration may occur either through the individual units, such as bricks or stones of which the wall is built, or by way of the jointing material, or through discontinuities of the bond between units and the jointing material.

The wall unit.

It has already been shown that most of our common walling materials have a porous capillary structure. In the case of solid walls in brickwork or masonry it is evident that if the rain is driven against the wall for a sufficient length of time moisture must inevitably reach the inner face. Nine-inch walls, where the headers provide a capillary path for moisture right through to the inner face, and less frequently thicker solid-brick walls, undoubtedly show penetration in this way in many cases. The only conclusion to be drawn is that the solid brick or masonry wall, however well constructed, is a gamble with the weather, and to rely on it to prevent penetration of moisture introduces an element of chance which is undesirable.

It is evident that the properties of the brick or stone must have an important bearing on the question of damp penetration. It is not possible, in the present state of knowledge, to indicate which of any given range of bricks or stones is likely to be the most resistant to penetration. It is certain, however, that the test of absorption by immersion, which is often used, alone affords little, if any, indication of the behaviour of the material in respect of the transmission of moisture under practical conditions; actually certain bricks which give very good results in buildings are shown to great disadvantage by a test of this kind.

The jointing mortar.

The type of mortar used will obviously have an important bearing on the penetration of moisture through walls. Since we must have a jointing material, it is evident that for a solid wall theory would point to a dense impervious mortar with all joints fully flushed up ; many specifications obviously have this object in view. Unfortunately under practical conditions it is almost impossible to get a really dense mortar. The water content of the mortar, which is of vital importance from the point of view of obtaining maximum density, is completely altered when the wet mix is placed in a thin layer between absorptive materials such as bricks or stones. The possibility of the formation of discontinuities between bricks and mortar has already been mentioned, and there is every reason to suppose that penetration often occurs by way of defects of this kind, and that in many cases where penetration occurs very rapidly it is due to this. A comprehensive investigation of the penetration of damp through brick walls has recently been carried out at the Mellon Institute in the U.S.A., and, whilst it would be unwise to apply the results too rigorously to British practice, the conclusions reached as a result of this work are well worth attention.* It is stated that discontinuities between bricks and mortar are the most important factor in producing damp penetration, and so far as the formation of such discontinuities is concerned, lime mortars and lime mortars with cement gauging are to be preferred to cement mortars since they give a more " elastic " structure. Experiments carried out on test walls, which have been erected at the Building Research Station for tests on water-proofers, suggest that lime mortar has advantages over cement mortar in respect of moisture penetration.

Design of walls.

The manner in which moisture penetration occurs has now been very briefly discussed, and it remains to consider how a wall can be designed so that no moisture will penetrate to the inner face under any conditions. It has been shown that moisture penetrates by way of capillary channels in the body of the materials themselves or by channels approximately of capillary dimensions which occur between materials and mortars. If the wall is to be dry under the most adverse conditions, these capillary channels must be broken, and this can be contrived only by means of a continuous membrane of an impermeable material or by the provision of a continuous or partially continuous void space. The best way of attaining this object is by means of the cavity wall, and despite all prejudices to the contrary, it is considered that the cavity wall, kept reasonably clear from mortar droppings and with properly designed details at heads and joints of openings, is at the moment the safest solution of the walling problem. No single case of serious penetration of a properly designed cavity wall has yet been brought to the notice of the Building Research Station. Many have been reported, but on careful investigation the trouble has been found to be due to violation in design of the principles of cavity construction or to careless workmanship. Some architects favour a wall construction in which the cavity is filled with cement mortar, sometimes with the addition of a waterproofing admixture. The difficulty of obtaining a really dense mortar has already been discussed, and there is, in addition, a quite appreciable danger of the formation of shrinkage cracks in the mortar core as well as voids where ties come through. Taking these points into consideration, it is thought that the unfilled cavity is to be preferred.

*" Amer. Arch. Record," 1931 ; 70 (Sept.) (3), 201/14).

It has often been remarked that the speculative builder escapes moisture penetration through his walls. On high-class work, with a clerk of works in attendance, joints are carefully flushed up, mortar mixes are specified, and yet moisture penetrates. The speculative builder uses strange mortars and sometimes does not attempt to fill his joints carefully, and yet his walls are weather resistant in the main. It is quite likely that the capillary path for moisture in the less meticulously jointed wall is less continuous, and, consequently, less likely to allow penetration of moisture under certain circumstances. In other words, " good building " from one point of view is not necessarily " good building " from another. By the courtesy of the engineer of a local authority an interesting experiment was carried out on a housing estate. Three houses were erected using identical bricks and mortar, but different methods were employed for making the joints:—

(i.) Red-facing bricks, backed with clinker bricks in solid 9-inch work, built with greystone-lime and sand 3½ to 1, pointed with Portland cement and washed sand. All cross-joints put right through and lateral joints between stretchers thoroughly well flushed up. Plastered internally.

(ii.) As above, but no flushing up of internal joints.

(iii.) As above, but built as two separate 4½-inch walls, no flushing up, bonded with metal reinforcement every six courses.

On completion of the houses a hose was attached to a half-inch bibcock, full on and direct from the main, and was directed on the brickwork at 3 inches distance. The following observations were made:—

(i.) Dampness appeared on the inside after 3½ hours' continuous flow ;

(ii.) No dampness appeared after 5½ hours' continuous flow ;

(iii.) No dampness appeared after 9 hours' continuous flow.

These experiments were perhaps not sufficiently closely controlled to warrant universal application, but the results are certainly interesting.

Cement rendering and stuccos.

Since it is generally recognised that the solid wall is liable to allow penetration of moisture, recourse is often made to cement renderings and stuccos to provide a weather-resistant cover. Generally speaking these materials are successful in preventing penetration of moisture, and in no case which has been brought to the notice of the Building Research Station has it been definitely established that moisture penetration was due to direct permeation through the rendering. Actually, however, troubles are by no means unusual ; cement renderings, in common with cement concretes and mortars, shrink as they dry, and this shrinkage is liable to lead to the formation of cracks. Once cracks have formed, a very bad condition arises ; damp penetrates through the cracks, but evaporation is hindered when favourable weather conditions follow rain, and a badly cracked rendering may actually be worse than an unprotected wall. If, as is sometimes the case, the bricks happen to contain excessive amounts of soluble salts, it may actually be impossible to apply a cement rendering satisfactorily. Cement-mortar roughcast and pebble-dashed finishes appear to be less troublesome than the floated renderings. It may be that here shrinkage is taken up in a system of very fine cracks round individual pebbles, and the danger of moisture penetration is less than when the cracks are less numerous but larger.

The isolated inner lining.

Traditional Scottish practice deals with the damp wall problem by providing an inner lining out of capillary contact with the body of the wall. The brickwork or masonry is plugged, plugs are cut off about $\frac{1}{8}$ inch clear of the face of the wall ; battens $1\frac{1}{2}$ inch by $\frac{3}{4}$ inch are secured to the plugs ; the battens are lathed, and the wall is then plastered. However damp the external wall may become, no moisture can reach the plaster, since apparently the timber does not provide a simple capillary path ; this would appear to be a very satisfactory way of dealing with the solid wall. In the best class of work the internal partition walls are not bonded into external walls, metal ties being used. These methods of dealing with solid walls are logical when considered in the light of the capillary properties of walling materials, and are generally supposed to be reliable ; no doubt they have certain disadvantages, but from the point of view of damp penetration no criticism can be offered.

Dry walling.

In certain parts of the country, notably in the neighbourhood of the Scottish border where the rainfall is particularly heavy, there are local methods of preventing penetration of damp by the use of very thick rubble masonry walls laid " dry." Evenly bedded stones are placed in the wall with a slight fall to the outer face. No mortar is used, and in this case the voids between the stones would be so large as to have little if any capillary effect.

In some moorland districts traditional methods consist of thick rubble walls in which an outer and inner leaf are laid up in mortar, and the interior is filled with loose stones ; a limited number of bonding stones are used. Local craftsmen are prepared to guarantee that no penetration will occur if allowed to proceed in their own way.

In both these types of wall the capillary path for moisture is reduced to a minimum. Details of the closures at openings must, however, be rather difficult to work out.

4. CONDENSATION.

There is little to be added to what has already been said about condensation. The fundamental cause, which may be briefly summarised as a lowering to below the dewpoint of the temperature of the air in contact with the condensing surface, is fairly generally understood. But consideration of the various combination of factors which may lead in practice to such a condition is complicated. From what has been said it will be seen that condensation troubles may be reduced by extra ventilation, or by more absorptive surfaces, or by more heat-insulation in the walls. All these are factors which may be of assistance in preventing it.

It should be mentioned too in this connection that where reports of dampness, attributed to condensation, have been received by the Building Research Station, in the vast majority of cases it has been found, on careful investigation, that the conditions were due to more serious causes—usually penetration. It may certainly be said, however, that liability to condensation is greater when a structure is already damp from other causes.

CURE OF DAMP IN BUILDINGS.

It is a matter for regret that there are certain troubles which are chronic and for which no real cure exists. Temporary alleviation can be obtained, but the radical operation which would strike at the root of the trouble is usually considered to be too drastic. The " quack " remedy occupies a very prominent place, and recourse to secret preparations may often be unsatisfactory.

In selecting a treatment for damp penetration some reasonable explanation should be required of the manner in which the materials purport to function. Tests by a reliable authority are obviously the best criterion on which to rely. It should, however, be borne in mind, when test results are under review, that although many preparations may be quite effective when freshly applied, the question of their durability must also be taken into account.

1. Defective Damp-Course, or Damp-Course Lacking.

There appears to be no real remedy short of the insertion of a damp-course by one or other of the recognised methods. The provision of a lining out of capillary contact with the wet wall will often provide an indirect remedy, but the danger of dry-rot attack must always be kept in view.

Some improvement can sometimes be effected by improving drying conditions. Drastic sub-floor ventilation, drainage of the foundations, and the formation of a dry area down to foundation level, are expedients which suggest themselves.

There are certain remedies for which pseudo-scientific theories are advanced but which are unlikely to be of any real value. It is a great pity to waste time and money which could be spent more profitably, and it is always open to the user, when confronted with proprietary remedies, to ask for scientific evidence that the suggested remedy is a reasonable one.

2. ROOF LEAKAGES.

In most cases the remedy is obvious. Deterioration of the roof covering calls for renewals, and, although an interesting subject, space does not allow of a full discussion of the multitudinous preparations available for patching.

In cases where torching mortar leads to damp conditions below tiled roofs, the removal of the torching would probably result in a material improvement.

3. DAMP WALLS.

The cure of a damp wall is one of the most difficult problems to deal with, especially when, as is often the case, a treatment is required which will not mar the appearance of facing brickwork or masonry.

There is a great number of proprietary waterproofers on the market, and some may certainly be termed the quack medicines of the building industry. It is very desirable, in selecting a treatment for any given case, to have some knowledge of the basic principle by which the material is supposed to function. A comprehensive investigation on the subject of waterproofers is in progress at the Building Research Station, and it is hoped that ultimately publication of the results will be possible ; the work has not yet reached a stage where a report can be issued.

The surface waterproofing treatments available may be roughly classified as depending on the following effects:—

(1) Filling of the surface pores of the material to be treated.

(2) Coating of the pores with a film of a water-repellent substance, the film not necessarily being continuous over the whole surface of the material.

(3) The provision of waterproof coating of appreciable thickness, and almost continuous nature over the whole surface.

With many waterproofers attempts are made to combine these effects. Some of them are chemically inactive with respect to the material treated ; in other cases some chemical reaction is involved (either between the waterproofer and the surface treated, or between two or more ingredients used in the treatment).

The following is a classification of substances which are known to be present in various typical waterproofing preparations:—

PORE FILLING.		WATER REPELLENT.		Continuous surface film.
Active.	Inactive.	Active.	Inactive.
Sodium or Potassium silicate. Aluminium sulphate. Zinc sulphate. Silico-fluorides of zinc, magnesium calcium or aluminium. Hydrofluo-silicic acid. Sodium or potassium silicate and calcium chloride.	Chalk. Alumina. Silica. Cement (as a slurry).	Soap and alum. Lime and linseed oil. Resin soaps.	Aluminium soaps. Bitumen and coal tar residues. Waxes and fats. Vegetable oils, e.g. Linseed oil, Tung oil. Shellac, resins and gums.	Paint. Varnish. Bitumen. Rubber.

So far as present information goes, the treatments which aim solely at a pore-filling effect are not very successful. It appears to be very difficult to seal the pores effectively under practical conditions.

The water-repellent materials form the basis of most of the colourless waterproofers and are probably the most important type to consider. It is desirable to consider the manner in which a water-repellent material delays the penetration of moisture. Reverting to the original discussion of the mechanism of surface tension and capillary forces, it will be remembered that the curvature of the liquid surface in contact with the solid is the deciding factor in promoting attraction or repulsion of water in our capillary channel. The application of a resinous or oily substance to a porous material results in the deposition of an oily or resinous layer on the walls of the capillary, but, actually, the capillary is not plugged. The effect of the oily layer is to alter the curvature of the liquid surface in contact with the solid, and the surface-tension forces in the capillary may actually be reversed. Provided the external forces introduced by wind or hydrostatic pressure are not in excess of the force which the greasy capillary can exert, no moisture will penetrate ; but it is evident that the moisture repellent effect, imparted by some treatments, is insufficient to prevent the penetration of driving rains, and the treatments fail. Thus colourless waterproofers may not always be effective ; and although the question of durability has not yet been fully investigated, there is reason to suppose that a short term of years is a fair life for treatments of this kind.

Many materials of the type which give a continuous, or almost continuous, film are definitely effective under all conditions of exposure and are longer lived than the colourless preparations, but they must inevitably result in a drastic alteration of the appearance of the treated wall. The behaviour of oil paints and oil-emulsion-water paints is now generally known, and the difficulties of preparing the surfaces to be treated are also recognised. A new type of material which is likely to be important in the future is the coloured bitumen emulsion, and examples of materials of this class have been examined, which have excellent waterproofing properties and appear likely to be durable.

Penetration through a cracked cement rendering or roughcast is particularly difficult to deal with ; if, as is sometimes the case, the problem is complicated by a high soluble salt content of the brickwork, it may be impossible to make the rendering good. In some instances which have been brought to the notice of the Building Research Station repeated efforts have been made to repair or renew renderings over salty bricks with no success. It is necessary in such cases to apply the new rendering out of capillary contact with the brickwork, and such expedients as rendering on lathing secured away from the face of the wall on battens, or rendering on lathing over a bituminous insulating layer, become necessary.

The Scottish method of securing a dry-wall lining has already been mentioned. In particularly difficult cases of penetration the use of an internal lining, out of capillary contact with the wet wall, may be the most satisfactory remedy. It must be borne in mind, however, that the conditions of joist ends and flooring in contact with the wet wall may be very bad.

In conclusion it may be stated that the wet wall is often so very difficult to deal with that every care should be taken in the first instance to erect a wall which is capable of preventing damp penetration.

Transactions of The Chartered Surveyors' Institution

AT THE ORDINARY GENERAL MEETING

Held at The Chartered Surveyors' Institution on Monday, 7th March, 1932.

Mr. J. E. BIDWELL (President) in the Chair.

NEW MEMBERS.

The following new Members were presented by the PRESIDENT for formal admission to membership under Bye-law 31, and signed the Register:—

Professional Associates :

A DISCUSSION took place on Mr. R. FITZMAURICE'S Paper entitled

CAUSES, CONSEQUENCE AND CURE OF DAMP IN BUILDINGS.

Mr. C. H. BEDELLS (Past-President) said that he was glad to propose a vote of thanks to Mr. Fitzmaurice, in the first place, because it was always a pleasant thing to express appreciation when a professional gentleman who knew his subject thoroughly shared his knowledge for the benefit of his fellows, and that evening Mr. Fitzmaurice had given the results of the experience of himself and the organisation which he represented ; secondly, because he welcomed the opportunity of saying a word about the work of the Building Research Board, because that work was not sufficiently appreciated or known as well as it should be.

Personally he knew something about it because his late partner, Mr. Crompton, was for some years a member of the Research Board appointed by the R.I.B.A., but he doubted whether many of those present that evening realised, for instance, what publications were being issued by the Board, such as its Annual Reports, Annual Building Science Abstracts Volumes, with their indices both of subject-matter and names, and a bibliography on all sorts of technical matters relating to building. From the Annual Report for 1931 he found that the abstracts issued on building matters now reached a total of 2,500 ; they were abstracts of the results of scientific investigation into a variety of building problems, and the subject-matter index was of great value.

Some of the publications, however, were perhaps not quite as useful as they might be. He could give one or two illustrations of that in connection with the subject of the Paper that evening. For example, in the Annual Report for 1927 there occurred the following passage: " The " remedies suggested were necessarily various, but they " appear to have been effective." There was, however, no index or reference in that publication which would help anyone who wanted to know at short notice what remedies those were which were various but had been found effective.

Again, in the 1928 Report he read: " A proprietory " surface waterproofing compound was submitted for " examination. Aluminium, soap, and fat in a paraffin oil " medium. It is considered that this material is an " excellent example of its class and should yield satis-

" factory results. It should be realised, however, that such " surface-applied preparations do not last indefinitely." If there had been appended to that summary a note that particulars of this surface waterproofing compound could be found in Abstract No. so-and-so, it would have added greatly to the value of the annual summary.

Then the 1930 Report said: " Tests have been made to " determine the effect on the rate of evaporation of moisture of inclined porous clay tubes set in specimens of " brickwork and natural stone. Experiments have been " carried out in the laboratory and also on a field scale. " The results indicate that no useful increase in the rate of " evaporation of moisture results from the use of these " tubes." The system in which he (the speaker) was interested at the moment seemed to be a system of inclined porous tubes. It had been used a great deal abroad, and had passed the experimental stage, as it had been used in such places as the Palace of Versailles, and in railway stations and other public buildings. It looked as if the system reported on in the extract he had quoted was that which was on his mind, or its first cousin, but there was nothing in the Report which indentified the particular system which was examined and so far found wanting. If a few additional particulars could be given in those valuable Annual Reports, it would help many people who had to consider problems of the kind and the methods which should be adopted to meet them.

That also raised the question, which perhaps Mr. Fitzmaurice might feel justified in referring to in his reply, of the footing on which what might be described as " pro" prietory " articles and systems were examined and reported on. He would like to know whether they were reported on anonymously and the report made available only to the people interested in the particular article or system, or examined for a report pro bono publico and submitted on that understanding.

Turning to the Paper on which he proposed to say only a few words, the thanks of The Institution were most certainly due to Mr. Fitzmaurice for the interesting way in which he had dealt with what, though anything but a " dry " subject, might well have become so. The members were indebted to him for calling attention to the difficulties and problems encountered and to the solutions which had been proposed, even though he sometimes found those solutions ineffective and was not always prepared to suggest an alternative. One illustration of that was to be found in the details Mr. Fitzmaurice gave regarding the result of the absorption test for bricks, and how that failed in the ways in which it was often applied. Mr. Fitzmaurice had not suggested any very convincing alternative to what the members had been taught, when learning building construction, was a good test for bricks, viz., their relative powers of absorption.

With regard to the behaviour of cement, it looked as if the trend of opinion in recent years was right, and that lime-mortar with cement gauging was on the whole more satisfactory than cement and sand used for brickwork. At any rate, Mr. Fitzmaurice seemed to have arrived at the conclusion that, so far as moisture was concerned, it was much better to have a gauged-lime mortar than a cement mortar.

He also dealt with the question of the effectiveness of rendering defective walls in cement, and used the words " cracks " and " crazing." It would be interesting to know whether the conclusions reached referred to crazing or to the more extensive cracks which were found in cement rendering.

He (Mr. Bedells) once had a considerable amount of trouble from leakage through the tile roof of a bay window. It was constructed in the normal way with three layers of tile embedded in cement, but in course of time there was a great deal of leakage from cracks which were almost in the nature of hair cracks. To deal with that he used a proprietory article. Mr. Fitzmaurice said that when one contemplated the use of a proprietory article one should inquire as to the scientific basis on which it was supposed to operate. The article which he used was "Ionite," and the scientific fact on which its use was advocated was that when it was applied the rusting of the iron particles resulted in expansion and not contraction in the crack. The experiment was so successful in the case in question that if ever he had to deal again with cracks in a cement-rendered flat he would fly to "Ionite" as a preparation which at all events would give a good chance of success. If "Ionite" was one of the substances which the Research Board had investigated, he would be glad if Mr. Fitzmaurice could negative or corroborate that opinion. He had, of course, no interest in "Ionite" or any proprietory article.

The effect of cement on lead, referred to on page 102 of the Paper, was somewhat remarkable, but not so remarkable as the statement made in one of the abstracts of the Research Board as to the effect of cement on 5 lb. lead, namely, that in one instance contact between cement and 5 lb. lead had in fifteen years reduced its effectiveness to the thickness of a "sheet of paper." With a fact like that before one, one would take more to heart the advice that all lead pipes should receive protection at "passings."

A short time ago there appeared in one of the technical building papers a series of articles entitled "Things that "Matter." He thought Mr. Fitzmaurice had given a number of little hints in the course of the Paper on things that mattered. There could be no doubt that the effect of the work which had been done by the Research Board, and similar organisations, was definitely in the direction of eliminating waste. Recently, as the members would be aware, the London County Council had issued, in anticipation of the new London Building Act, a code of practice for the use of steel, &c., the result of which would be to reduce the cost of steel construction and to eliminate a great deal of waste which had been going on for some time.

There were other points he might mention, but he thought he had said enough to justify the resolution which he ventured to submit, namely, that the best thanks of the meeting should be given to Mr. Fitzmaurice for his Paper and for the most interesting way in which he had elaborated it that evening.

Lieut.-Colonel S. H. PAGE, C.M.G. (Chartered Surveyor), who seconded the vote of thanks, said that Mr. Fitzmaurice had given some really valuable scientific data which the ordinary man in practice found it difficult to obtain. His recommendation as to site concrete was perfectly sound and one that should be observed, but there were difficulties in covering the site with, say, big rocks and then with concrete, since the ordinary contractor used the dry-core as a bed for his concrete to sit on. Though he agreed in principle with Mr. Fitzmaurice, he saw some difficulty in applying his advice in practice.

So far as site concrete was concerned, he liked to render the whole of the site-concrete raft with waterproof-rendering, not because of damp, but because he had a horror of ground air rising through the porous concrete into the house. He did it from a sanitary point of view. He felt sure in some cases which had come to his notice that the occupiers had suffered in health from this cause.

He agreed absolutely as to the necessity of through ventilation underneath the sub-floor. He had seen many cases where ventilation had been provided only in the front wall, and dry-rot had occurred within six months, simply because there was no through draught. On creating through draught the dry-rot was delayed and practically stopped at once.

He was glad to hear that there was no danger of cracking from a slate dampproof-course, a point on which he had been so nervous that of late years he had always used a bituminous dampproof-course.

The danger of solid filling adjoining a sub-floor was a very real one. That was obvious, but it was one of those things which ninety-nine people out of a hundred did quite innocently without realising what was likely to happen until damp began to show on the internal wall. Mr. Fitzmaurice had done well to remind members of that point.

The junction of roof and wall was always a weak point, and he liked to carry the roof well over the walls if possible. He was accustomed to use boarding and felt, but he would not use a felt which was non-porous to air. He preferred a porous felt which was impregnated with bitumen and threw off water. He remembered two drill halls, built of exactly the same material and to exactly the same design, boarded, felted and covered with asbestos slates on the roof. In one case the felting was of the impervious type which would not allow any air or water to go through at all, and in the other case a type of felt was used through which air could easily pass. In the former case dry-rot started in all the roof timbers in less than two years, whereas the other building, though twenty years old, was as sound to-day as when it was first put up. In another case he had to advise about a house in town, and on looking at the roof he found the trouble was arising merely because the roof was altogether too air-tight, and the timbers were palpably suffering.

He was surprised that Mr. Fitzmaurice recommended a dampproof-course just below the roof-line in a chimney-stack ; he always put his just above ; and tried to get an offset-course in the chimney-stack just above the roof-line to tuck his flashings under. He did not like the idea of damp brickwork below the roof level, and would like to hear the reason for Mr. Fitzmaurice's recommendation.

He supported Mr. Fitzmaurice in his dislike for torching ; he liked slates and tiles to be bedded dry. He remembered a church of which the aisles were tiled at about 45 degrees, and rain was always coming through on the south aisle ; even with the slightest film of rain the water came through on to the heads of the congregation. Many remedies had been tried without success ; he had then been called in, and found that the tiles were torched. He had stripped the whole of the tiles, cleaned off the torching and pointing, and relaid them dry-bedded with every third course nailed. There had never been a drop of water through since.

With regard to cavity walls he could give a practical instance of their value in the case of two houses on the south coast, built on the edge of a cliff, and much exposed to south-west gales. In one case the walls were solid and 2 feet 3 inches thick, plastered direct on the inside. A hundred yards away there was another with a 9-inch hollow cavity wall. In a south-west gale the solid wall invariably showed signs of damp, but he had never seen a sign of damp inside the cavity-wall house. He did not agree, however, with ventilating the cavity, though he knew it was generally done. Nor did he like putting openings in the cavity because of insects and other undesirable inhabitants ; and the air in the cavity would always be changed owing to the porosity of the brick. The change of air due merely to that porosity, moreover, was slow, and, therefore, the temperature of the house was more equable ; yet there was no danger of undue pressure through the want of air inside the cavity.

Crazing in stucco work had been referred to. He had had a good deal of trouble with that, which had arisen chiefly from hair cracks and not definite cracks. He noticed Mr. Fitzmaurice recommended pebble-dashing, but his own results with pebble-dashing had been disastrous. He had in mind a case of a house which was built with 9-inch solid walls and plastered directly on the inside and covered outside with plain stucco lined out as ashlar. It was always damp, and a lot of money was spent in trying to cure it. It was re-rendered and pebble-dashed, but the damp still went through as easily as before. He had been called in, and at once took the view that the film of water round the pebbles was being driven by the wind into the cracks, and that it was necessary in some way to get rid of the mositure clear of the wall. He had selected big flints and angular stones about 1 inch in size. There was endless trouble in getting them on ; but he had perservered and there had never been any trouble since. The principle was, of course, that the moisture was broken up into thousands of little drops which dripped clear of the actual surface of the wall and were broken up by the air. He had tried the experiment again on another building, and it had again been a complete success ; there, he thought, was food for reflection.

He had very great pleasure in seconding the vote of thanks, because he thought Mr. Fitzmaurice had been of real service to The Institution in coming that night and opening the question.

Mr. ALAN MUNBY, F.R.I.B.A. (Visitor), thanked The Institution for its hospitality in inviting him to be present to listen to Mr. Fitzmaurice's very able Paper. As a member of the Building Research Board he would like to make a few comments on the remarks of Mr. Bedells, since such comments might come better from him than from Mr. Fitzmaurice. He would be attending a meeting of the Board that week, and would convey to them the views which Mr. Bedells had expressed. The difficulty, however, was that much of the work of the Station consisted of researches into proprietory articles. Obviously it was not possible always to publish the results of those researches. Mr. Fitzmaurice would correct him if he were wrong, but he thought that was partly the cause of the difficulty ; it would be impossible, for obvious reasons, to publish the whole of the results obtained.

At the R.I.B.A. a small Committee had been set up to deal with the subject of damp houses. The Institute was approached by the British Medical Association, who suspected a connection between damp houses and certain specific diseases. Briefly the position was that the doctors in Birmingham, parts of which were situated on an old watercourse, thought they had traced cases of rheumatic heart in children to the situation of their houses in damp areas. A good deal of evidence had been collected showing the apparent connection between rheumatic heart and damp ; so that from the medical, as well as the structural standpoint, there was very great justification for pursuing the subject.

The small Committee to which he had alluded had issued a questionnaire to all the medical officers of the country, and obtained some very valuable results. The causes of damp in buildings, due to roofs, walls, absence of damp-courses, water soaking up from the soil, and so on, had been classified, and the report could be obtained for a few pence from the R.I.B.A.

With regard to ventilation, he had in mind the case of a cottage which was carefully ventilated under the floors. The work was well carried out, but shortly afterwards he had found dry-rot on the floors which had obviously blown in through the ventilators from the adjoining property. That was discouraging, and even went to show that ventilation might occasionally be a danger.

It seemed from the work of the Station and from what Mr. Fitzmaurice had said that the ideal material was one which had fine capillary pores under the exterior face with coarser pores in its interior. The work of the Station seemed to show that the finer the capillary tubes the more effective would be their powers of absorption. If, therefore, it were possible to produce a brick which was finely pored externally but coarsely on the inside, the presumption would be that after a shower of rain capillary action would tend to draw the water to the outside face.

He did not see how it was possible to make a wall water-tight. Moreover, a wall wanted air through it, to breathe, as it were ; and it was desirable to have some material which was sufficiently porous to enable moisture to enter and have an opportunity of evaporating fairly easily. It was as important to allow water to get out, by evaporation, as to prevent it getting in. The ideal wall, he thought, was a tile-hung wall, in which one had an instance of an ordinary porous material through which air could pass and with the possibility of evaporation.

He was very pleased to hear lime-mortar well spoken of. He always liked to use it, but it had been largely discarded in these days of Portland cement, and it was difficult to get an ordinary builder to use anything but fat lime. The work of the Station had clearly proved that if a material were used as mortar with approximately the same density as the brick it would be better, not only for damp prevention but also for preventing decay, than ordinary porous brick with cement joints of closer density. Modern research went to prove that the more uniform the general density of the wall the better it would be.

Mr. Bernard Briant (Chartered Surveyor) agreed with Colonel Page as to the position of the damp-course in a chimney-stack. If it was just below the roof line, damp must get into the room. He had often wondered what happened to the water which finally sat on the damp-course in a chimney-stack ; he supposed it must trickle somewhere. He was surprised, however, to hear Colonel Page advocate the non-ventilation of the cavity wall ; he would have thought an unventilated air cushion was not an insulator for damp.

He was being asked to advise on a case where money had been spent to convert a cellar into a strong room, and it had not been successful, particularly so far as condensation was concerned. The original brick wall had been rendered over in damp-proof cement, and a breeze wall had been added with a 2-inch cavity between, but still the silver plate boxes and papers which were kept down there were tarnished and suffered from mildew ; the owner did not like it, and the contractor was wondering what he could do. The problem was how to make ventilators which would allow air to penetrate but keep out fog and moisture. If anyone had anything to say on that subject he would be interested to hear it.

The sliding of walls, which was referred to in the Paper, was rare, but he had just come across a case where a wall had slid a whole inch. He supposed the action of the sun in the summer made the asphalt damp-course hot, and it crept a little every year.

The danger of solid filling getting above the damp-course was one which some builders, and perhaps, some architects, neglected with surprising frequency ; occupiers of houses, moreover, often put their garden beds 6 inches above the damp-course. They would also remember the London

Building Act required the damp-course to be 6 inches below the lowest floor. There was no objection to that with a wooden floor ; but with a solid floor, and with the cheaper class of buildings where the concrete was not always very thick, there was room for failure if the bye-law were carried out too rigidly.

The torching of tiles was wrong ; there seemed general agreement as to that. Not much of it was to be seen in London. It was expensive, it was weighty, and it was not watertight.

He doubted whether zinc was ever a suitable material for soakers, hidden as they were ; and with regard to the use of asbestos sheeting, he had come across several instances showing that it wanted watching. Although it might be supplied by the best known merchants, its porosity varied, and in more than one instance it had been necessary to strip and re-cover roofs of considerable area because the asbestos sheeting had let the water through. How one should test asbestos sheeting he did not know, and he would be glad of any information Mr. Fitzmaurice could give on that point.

In the winter of 1929-30 there were tremendous falls of rain with gales, and in the case of one building designed by his firm the water came clean through an exposed wall only a few weeks after it was built. The matter was taken up with the makers of the bricks, who pointed out that the circumstances were exceptional, and that much heavier bricks had let the water through, and so on, but there was the question of whether new bricks might not differ from old in that the pores of the older ones became filled with ordinary dirt. The old walls became more and more dirty as time went on, and he thought it was likely that in many cases the dirt helped to keep out the damp. He did not feel sure about that, but probably Mr. Fitzmaurice could say.

The advantages of lime-mortar over cement-mortar in respect of moisture penetration was an interesting point. The elasticity of lime-mortar was valuable where there was heavy road vibration.

The London Building Act made the provision of cavity walls too expensive a matter because it insisted on a solid wall first, and if a cavity was wanted, it had had to be put on afterwards ; but in view of what Mr. Fitzmaurice had said, there might be a possibility of some relaxation in the provisions of the Act in the future.

A mistake which he had come across in relation to cavity walls was again with regard to the position of the damp-course. The builder put his damp-course over the 14-inch wall footings, or whatever the width was, and then started his cavity above the damp-course. Personally he thought the cavity should go down 3 inches below the damp-course.

With regard to the test with the hose, he did not quite understand what was meant by (iii.), and would like to know whether the mention of " two separate 4½-inch walls" meant that there was a cavity there, or whether it was just a 9-inch wall with ties across it.

Rendering outside a wall which had no damp-course did more harm than good. By rendering the outside the wall had to dry inwards instead of outwards, and generally he thought rendering on brickwork was a much over-rated improvement. It was a job builders delighted in ; they were told to put it on one year, and it so often came off two or three years afterwards and had to be repaired.

He would like to make a point with regard to the design of the ordinary stoneware gully. The ordinary stoneware gully was glazed, and it was a constant source of failure leading to damp patches, due to the difficulty of making the cement paving adhere to the gully. The paving became slightly defective, and that led to trouble with the discharge from the waste pipe of the bath or sink. There must be thousands of sinks in smaller properties in London only partly discharging into the gully because of a slight defect between the cement and the gully. It seemed to him it should be possible to make a gully with unglazed grooves outside, so as to form a key to the cement, without adding greatly to the cost.

While on the subject of damp patches, it was well known, of course, that rain-water pipes should be fixed with distance pieces to keep them away from the wall, but there was a great deal of ignorance amongst occupiers on the question of damp caused by warning pipes from defective cisterns, defective gutters and pipes, and so on. School children should receive instruction in regard to elementary matters of that kind just as they were now being taught how to cross the road. No estate agent could go in and out of the backs of houses every few weeks, but the occupiers might draw attention to such points at once and so save a lot of nuisance, both to themselves and the owner. Builders were often careless about the weathering and throating of window sills, and stone sills were often ignorantly spoiled with cement casing.

Mr. Alan W. Pipe (Professional Associate) agreed that torching was bad, yet it seemed to have advantages in that it prevented heat loss from the building.

He would like to ask whether cases had been reported of the failure of cavity walls owing to ties rusting through and wind pressure on tall gable walls, because that seemed a possible danger. He would also like to know whether or not it was desirable to carry a concrete lintel across to the back of the facing arch in cavity walls.

Mr. Fitzmaurice did not like " quack " waterproofers. Ten years ago his firm had the problem of creating a store for manuscripts and deeds for a firm of solicitors in a sub-basement in Wallbrook. The River Wallbrook used to overflow its subterranean banks and flood the room. They rendered the walls and floor with " Ionite " cement slurry, and put in elementary ventilation and heating, and it was still dry enough to store deeds there.

So far as ventilation was concerned, the problem was largely due to inefficient air bricks, but with the School Board pattern in common use, the greater danger was that architects would centralise them on their elevations, whereas they should be placed as near as possible to the angles of a building so as to avoid stagnant corners.

Mr. Fitzmaurice did not care for bituminous preparations on the whole, yet asphalt, which come within that category, was the finest damp-course, indeed the only one which was dependable in all circumstances. With modern fillers there should be no danger of it softening, otherwise he did not know what would happen to many of the big buildings. He would be interested to know why a building should slide on its damp-course, and whether that was due to wind pressure ; apart from this, pressures were vertical and there was no cause for lateral movement.

It was accepted practice to specify jointing to rain-water pipes, but it seemed desirable to leave them unjointed as the cheap builder did, so that if they choked at the foot they overflowed at the first joint and not at the gutter level.

So far as the use of lime-mortar was concerned, if one went to the best of the old brick buildings, say, round Lincoln's Inn Fields, the external face work was excellent ; but if a brick were removed, one would find pure rubble inside, since lime-mortar was used for the work. It never set or hardened except on the surface. It seemed to him that the most economical mortar to use was 1 of cement to 5 of sand, with a little lime added so that a man could work it.

With regard to pointing, during the very wet period in 1931 he saw a wall which had just been repointed for half its length. Nevertheless, the moisture drove through the whole way across ; the pointing had done no good at all. When that moisture dried out, as it did internally in the pointed portion, the plaster came off the wall owing to the efflorescence which had been caused by the salts driving through the wall. The owners had spent a lot of money in pointing without making it waterproof, and it entailed the removal of all the plaster.

On the question of rendering, he did not like Colonel Page's idea of great flints stuck over the face of the building. With a cottage it was desirable to have something which was restrained in surface finish. With a trowel finish one got large crazing, but even if a felt float were used, one obtained small localised crazing with cement rendering. On looking over a cement works he had been shown some examples of white cement stucco which had, as one saw by looking closely, fine crazing all over. The best rendering he had found was blue lias lime with Portland cement under it, laid while the wall was wet, so that there was a body of water to cure the rendering. It was essential therefore to put it on in moist weather, and the last coat should be blue lias lime and sand, felt floated. That gave a permanent warm colour which was beautiful to look at and satisfactory in other respects.

Mr. P. J. WALDRAM (Chartered Surveyor) said he would like to draw attention to the admirable work of the Building Research Station and to suggest that a closer liaison might be maintained between it and The Institution. Only that morning in his copy of the " R.I.B.A. Journal " he had found the usual loose leaflet from the Research Station, containing a note on the investigation of an example of wall-paper staining. He had always taken material staining to be an indication of a wet wall ; but this, in the case reported upon, was found to be due to hygroscopic salts in the finishing coat of the plastering.

He thought the members of The Institution ought to know what a vast field of information was available to the Research Station and how much could be gleamed from their reports. The investigators were free from personal interests or professional distractions and had no object but to produce accurate, useful and reliable results with reasonable promptitude.

The result was the sort of Paper which had been presented that evening. It was interesting and instructive to compare what Mr. Fitzmaurice said on page 113 with the first advertisement which followed the Paper in the " Journal." When the Knapen system was first advocated in France, the Joint Committee of the British Medical Association and the R.I.B.A. investigated the claims then made for it in the original French. Doubtless, if and when the Research Station found reliable proof of the merits claimed for that system, or for any other, they would make it known to architects, but not before.

Mr. Fitzmaurice had perhaps stressed insufficiently the real cause of the entry of damp into buildings by capillary action. The smaller the pores of the material the greater was the capillary action, which varied inversely as the cube of the diameter of the interstices. If one took a close-grained-pressed Fletton brick and an open-grained London stock brick and poured an egg-cup full of water over each, it ran over the edges of the stock brick but soaked into the Fletton at once. The trouble nowadays with damp houses was largely due to the use of dense materials. Dense cement rendering and the use of pebble-dash was a direct invitation to the damp to come in.

He had used lime-mortar and lime-cement rendering and pebble-dash, adopting the oldest forms of structure and workmanship and technique that he could find, and the results had been most satisfactory. He would venture to suggest that generally speaking surveyors had opportunities which architects did not possess of investigating old methods of building. Those who had to deal with old-fashioned property could often find most valuable examples of building methods which had passed out of use, and by collaboration with the Research Station could bring those methods back to the notice of architects with no small advantage to both professions and to the public.

Overhanging eaves were an example. They had been almost forgotten, but they were effective in keeping walls dry. This was not because they kept the wet from running down, but because wet wind striking the wall was deflected upwards. The projecting eaves tended to bend back the current of air, with the result that water dripped, if at all, some two feet or so away from the wall. He had overhanging eaves on the south-west side of his house, and he could not keep the plants underneath properly watered even in wet weather.

One of the greatest dangers lay in discarding reliable but old-fashioned materials in favour of those with a dense close grain. Materials of more open grain were preferable such as the old stock bricks. The driest form of concrete-building block was one which was rendered by chemical action as porous as it possibly could be, almost resembling pumice.

On page 114, dealing with water repellents, the lecturer had referred to bitumen and coal-tar residues as inactive materials. He would have thought they were amongst the most active. On page 116 there was a reference to tar emulsions which had been examined and found to possess excellent waterproofing qualities and which seemed likely to be durable. From this one would expect the ideal water-repellent-concrete block to be one honeycombed with holes blown chemically in the material while setting and then coated with colourless tar emulsion.

The PRESIDENT, in putting the vote of thanks, said The Institution had to thank Mr. Fitzmaurice very much for his interesting Paper, from which so useful a discussion had resulted. In view of the lateness of the hour and the large number of points which had been raised, he thought it would be more satisfactory if Mr. Fitzmaurice were asked to reply in writing.

The vote of thanks was carried by acclamation.

Mr. R. FITZMAURICE thanked the members for the reception they had given to his Paper, and said the Research Station would be very pleased indeed to establish contact with any chartered surveyor who was interested in its work. Any information the Station possessed was always at their disposal and available to anyone in the building industry, and the more the Station was made use of the more useful it was likely to become.

The following written communication has been received from Mr. ARTHUR H. DAVIS (Chartered Surveyor):—

As regards horizontal damp-courses, two layers of slates laid with lapped joints in cement cannot be bettered. I do not care for asphalt or any bituminous material as damp-proof-course as it frequently squeezes out with the weight of the building, which necessitates hacking away the squeezed-out portions and filling in the spaces with a fillet of cement. Asphalt would not be affected by atmospheric heat as it is not a readily viscous material.

Asphalt makes an unrivalled vertical damp-proof course, but where used horizontally, such as a waterproof lining to the floor of an underground boiler-house, it is essential that a weight of material, such as concrete, be placed thereon to prevent it swelling or bellying up under what Mr. Fitzmaurice describes on page 95 as "hydrostatic "pressure due to a head of water."

Dealing with dry-rot, prior to reinstatement of material, treatment of affected surfaces is essential, and where other materials than timber can be used in replacement then so much the better for the building, because the spores of the fungus are very difficult to eradicate.

As to dry-rot of floors, some forms of construction lend themselves to this more than others. In factory work where floor-boards are used as a finishing covering to floors, it is a common practice to insert slats of wood in the concrete rather wider at the bottom than at the top, to which are nailed the boards. Means of ventilation are usually not provided in the various spaces between the slats, nor is the surface of the concrete treated with a bituminous coating. Consequently, unless the slats and undersides of the boards are well treated with a wood-preservative material (such as "Solignum"), dry-rot is bound to occur.

In a large showroom where this type of flooring was used, linoleum was laid on top, and dry-rot appeared in a very short period. One finds instances also where wood-block floors are placed directly upon a screeded concrete surface, and have not been treated with a bitumastic material to hold back the damp.

Another point of interest in maintaining dryness of buildings is the area of the surface-water down pipes and gutters in relation to the total area of the surface upon which rain falls. In one case brought to my notice the area of down pipes was shown to be insufficient to take the water which fell on the roof at storm time. Although there is apparently no law laid down as to the relationship of the area of down pipe to surface area, it is, I believe, usually accepted that the area of the former should be 1 inch to every 75 feet of surface. The difficulty in the instance under review was got over by replacing the 4-inch down pipes by 6-inch down pipes, thereby more than doubling the water flow outlet.

Several speakers made remarks on external wall rendering. In my opinion failure is largely due, firstly, to the brickwork joints (when rendering is applied to brickwork) not being sufficiently raked out, and, secondly, and far more important, to the fact that the brickwork surfaces are not properly and continuously damped. The result is that there is undue absorption by the bricks of the water in the rendering coats, which dry out before setting, causing crazying and serious cracking. If, in addition to wetting the surfaces of the brickwork before applying the rendering, the rendering were well watered as soon as it had set, it would be found that this crazying and cracking would be greatly reduced.

One method of reducing, if not eliminating, internal condensation is the false ceiling, that is to say, instead of plastering direct on to the underside of the concrete, to affix thereto a false ceiling of plaster. Ventilation of the air cushion between the plaster ceiling and the concrete will stop condensation.

It is quite wrong to obstruct a free circulation of air through the spaces and interstices of slates and tiles. Dry-rot rarely occurs in roof timbers and never where there is air access. Wet-rot is more frequently met with, particularly in wall plates and rafter ends, generally owing to faulty gutters.

As regards the effects of weather working on the laminations of stone as shown in one of the slides, whilst in prewar days when building was so much cheaper than it is today it was quite common to use stone in ordinary buildings, now only buildings of quality have stone work used therein.

The protection for stone, if there be risk of damage by weather conditions, is to cover it with lead work with suitable drips. Overhanging stone cornices should always be so treated so as to prevent atmospheric impurities being washed into the pores by rain and setting up disintegration.

If the stone retaining wall shown in the slide had had an asphalt vertical damp-course, no wet or chemical action from the sub-soil would have affected the same, and consequently there would have been no damp penetration of the stone work and subsequent decay. It was noticeable also in the slide that there were no weeps to throw off the sub-soil water, and its only outlet therefore was by soakage by capillary attraction through the wall.

Coke breeze in any form should be " taboo " in building because it usually contains small particles of partially burnt fuel. When water comes in contact with these particles, which contain sulphur, expansion takes place, and the plastered surfaces are ruined.

The clinker material, when it comes into contact with water from the plaster coat, swells and causes the plaster surface to blow and spall ; and as soon as any wet be applied to those walls and ceilings—for example, when distempering or stripping old paper—the blowing will again occur.

It is generally recognised, I think, that in any method of treatment of such a wall the only cure is the radical one of hacking away all plaster and rendering, thoroughly cleansing the wall surfaces and re-rendering with a more suitable material.

I have also known of balcony floors in a hospital, which were constructed of breeze concrete, to force, by the expansion above mentioned, the steelwork out of upright.

Mr. Fitzmaurice's Paper is not only of a high academic order, but also of great practical value, and one to which we shall be glad to refer from time to time.

The following reply has been received from Mr. FITZMAURICE:—

Mr. Bedells has called attention to the anonymity under which certain investigations have been reported in the publications of the Building Research Station. This does detract to some extent from the value of the information which is published. Investigations are undertaken on behalf of manufacturers and merchants on a repayment basis, and the reports of investigations of this kind may be used for commercial propaganda if the applicants desire. The Building Research Station may refer to this work in general terms, but it would obviously be undesirable to mention specific proprietary articles by name. It should be noted, however, that when a favourable report is issued, the manufacturer concerned may be relied upon to give it due publicity.

The Paper endeavours to emphasise that the remedy for the various ills to which building materials and structures are liable is not to be found in terms of any specific proprietary preparation. A diagnosis is called for on the part of the consultant, and the treatment appropriate for the trouble should be selected on a rational basis.

The Information Bureau of the Building Research Station is always prepared to assist as far as it is able, and such information is available as a free service for any section of the industry.

The question of tests for absorption has been dealt with at some length in the Annual Reports of the Building Research Board. All the information at present available indicates that an absorption test by immersion in water alone is of doubtful value, and it is known that by its use certain bricks of excellent reputation will compare very unfavourably with less reputable products.

The relative advantages of cement-mortars and lime-mortars gauged with cement are still under investigation. Standard specifications for Portland cement, and close scientific control in its manufacture, offer obvious advantages. The preparation of standard specifications for building limes is a logical step to ensure similar reliability in the marketed product, and work in this direction is being actively pushed forward.

The position of the dampproof-course in a chimney-stack is a controversial question. With sloping roofs there must be a certain amount of brickwork below the damp-course and above the roof. This brickwork may absorb water, but, on the other hand, Colonel Page's objection to damp brickwork below the roof is certainly a valid one. The main thing is to avoid the possibility of a large mass of brickwork above roof level acting as a reservoir.

Colonel Page's experience of the beneficial effect of removing torching mortar is valuable evidence of which the Station has been in need. In many cases it has been suggested that removal of torching would remedy damp penetration, but no definite confirmation of the advantages of this step could be mentioned.

The ventilation of the cavity in cavity walls is a controversial question. It is discussed in the Annual Report of the Building Research Board for the year 1930, page 103.

The device of preventing penetration of moisture through a wall by the application of a layer of large stones is interesting. Theoretically it is good, since a cover of this sort would have a non-capillary structure. Concrete walling, in which all the fine material had been eliminated, giving a structure of the kind described, has been found satisfactory from the point of view of damp resistance.

The case of damp conditions in cellars converted to strong rooms would need full discussion of all the details involved. By another curious coincidence a very similar case to that mentioned by Mr. Briant has been dealt with by the Information Bureau of the Building Research Station. It even seems possible that the buildings may be identical.

A standard specification for asbestos-cement sheeting is at present being drawn up by a Committee of the British Standards Institution. This will probably include requirements which should eliminate troubles of the kind described by Mr. Briant.

The question of the utility of a film of dirt as a preventitive of damp penetration has often been debated. No definite evidence of any appreciable advantage has been collected at the Building Research Station.

In the tests referred to on page 109 of the Paper No. (iii.) was a wall 9 inches thick, built up as two half-brick walls in stretchers ; there was no cavity in the ordinary sense of the word, the void space being merely of the ordinary joint thickness. This joint space, however, was not filled with mortar.

Mr. Pipe refers to the possible advantages of torching as a means of reducing heat losses. This function, however, could undoubtedly be performed far more efficiently by the use of materials of really low thermal conductivity. The failure of cavity walls from corrosion of ties is an interesting question, but no failure of this kind has yet been reported at the Building Research Station. The matter is discussed in the current series of " inquiries and answers " which are now being circulated to the building periodicals.

The causes of sliding of buildings on their damp-courses are probably very varied. Unsoundness resulting in movement of floors is probably quite a common cause. The expansion of wood-block floors, which is a quite a usual complaint, must result in a considerable thrust being exerted on the walls.

The failure of old lime-mortars to harden in the interior of walls has often been noted. This, of course, only refers to certain types of lime ; a fat-lime, that is to say one which possesses no hydraulic properties, only hardens, if at all, by a slow process of carbonation with atmospheric carbon dioxide. In thick walls the access of carbon dioxide is prevented to a large extent, and no hardening can occur. The remedy is obviously to use a lime possessing hydraulic properties, or to gauge a fat-lime with a sufficient proportion of Portland cement to impart the degree of hardness required.

Mr. Waldram calls attention to the classification of bitumen and coal-tar residues as " inactive." It should be noted that the classification of " active " or " inactive " which has been adopted in the table refers solely to the property of the various treatments of reacting chemically with constituents in the treated surface, or, in the case of treatments where two or more substances are applied separately, these are also classed as active which might react chemically with each other.

The activity expressed in this way does not purport to relate in any way with the efficiency of the treatment.

A CONSIDERATION OF THE RENT RESTRICTION ACTS COMMITTEE'S REPORT.

By Edward W. Eason (Chartered Surveyor).

To be read at the Ordinary General Meeting of The Chartered Surveyors' Institution on Monday, 11th April, 1932.

I have been invited to write a Paper on the subject of the Report of the Rent Restrictions Act Committee for the purpose of a discussion by members of The Institution.

A Member of the Council of The Institution was appointed to the Committee and two other Members of the Council attended before the Committee and presented the views of The Institution. There is, therefore, already in the records of The Institution a very large supply of information, far more than one such as myself has access to.

I am a chartered surveyor in ordinary general practice with some amount of estate management in connection with which weekly rents and small-class property have their existence. I assume, therefore, that in asking me to prepare this Paper it is the desire of The Institution to get a view of the Report as it strikes an ordinary member in general practice.

As a first point for discussion, therefore, I suggest that, generally speaking, the proposals as put forward by the Committee are reasonable and equitable as between landlords and tenants, and the Report is an excellent fair-minded one singularly free from political bias and showing from internal evidence that it is the result of extremely patient and scientific research. As is stated, the necessary facts which would ensure a strictly scientific and impartial judgment are difficult to arrive at. I suggest that a reading of the Report shows that the Committee has succeeded in getting such a number of data as has enabled it to reach satisfactory conclusions without unduly favouring either party. I think it is probable that both landlord and tenant have really obtained at least as much as they expected and possibly a little more than either of them hoped for. I think also it should be borne in mind that rent restriction, though it has been irritating and in many ways a source of hardship and to some extent of loss, is no more than one of the many aspects of the housing question which has had to be faced. The control has been, and as the Committee shows still is, to some considerable extent necessary for the community as a whole. When weighing the relative disadvantages of the encroachment on owners' rights and the housing requirements, the Committee have given first place to the needs of the community, but at the same time it has relieved the owners so far as the facts have justified that course being adopted.

I suppose that the two Associations most really independent for expressing opinions upon this question of rent restriction are our Chartered Surveyors' Institution and the Auctioneers' and Estate Agents' Institute, and it is evident from the references in the Report that our Institution was enabled to give valuable advice and information to the Committee, unbiassed either from the owner's or the occupier's point of view.

Endeavouring to look at the matter from this unbiassed point of view, I think we shall agree, or at any rate I put it forward as a point for consideration, that owners have not in this post-war period been in an unfavourable position relatively to owners of other classes of property or real estate. They should bear in mind that of all forms of investment house property has been more stable than almost any other, and that there has been a permitted and legalised increase which has been received without fluctuation during this post-war period when other forms of investment have been fluctuating considerably. In addition to this increase the payment of rent of the poorer-class houses has, generally speaking, been more regular and accompanied with less losses. In fact with the possible exception of office accommodation I think it is true to say that the rise and maintenance of rent has been steady and fairly persistent. Rent has been stabilised and punctually paid where the Rent Restriction Acts are in force. In the case of office accommodation, the removal of rent restriction has assisted the supply to exceed the demand, and normal business conditions prevail.

Turning now to the subject of the Paper, the Report is divided into nineteen sections. With one dissentient the Report is unanimous and is signed by all the members of the various political shades of opinion and also by the special non-political members of the Committee, among whom I, of course, include the representative from our Institution.

The first section is merely introductory, but in the second section there is a valuable historical outline of the Rent Restriction Acts which limits of space prevent me from quoting. I have, however, set out the following short table of the classes of control and their extension:—

Houses of Annual Rateable Value in				Permitted Increase.
—	London.	Scotland.	Elsewhere.	Rent.	Mortgage Interest.
Act of 1915	Up to £35	Up to £30	Up to £26	Nil	Nil
Act of 1919	Up to £70	Up to £60	Up to £52	10 per cent.	½ per cent. up to maximum 5 per cent.
Act of 1920	Up to £105	Up to £90	Up to £78	30 per cent., and after 2/7/21 40 per cent.	1 per cent. up to maximum 6½ per cent.

It is stated that the original provisions applied to approximately 85 per cent. of all the dwelling-houses in Great Britain and that the subsequent Acts of 1919 and 1920 extended the control so as to include about 98 per cent. of all the houses in the country.

The original restrictions were not imposed for the benefit of the working classes, but were a War measure aimed at securing homes for tenants and to prevent the exaction of scarcity rents due to the stoppage of house building during the War.

III.—STATISTICAL.

After this historical outline, the Committee has then proceeded to consider the statistical aspect of the problem, having regard to certain ascertained facts, which were:—

(i.) That since the War more than 1½ million new houses have been built ;

(ii.) That overcrowding shows no signs of improvement ;

(iii.) That when houses become decontrolled, higher rents are obtained ; and

(iv.) That the housing conditions of the poorer-paid workers is very far from satisfactory.

As a result, the Committee proceeded to obtain statistics, and particularly valuable statistics, from general and special information the results of observations over a wide area supplied by the Ministry of Labour, from which it would appear that—

(i.) The total number of houses in England and Wales is about 9 million, 7½ million pre-war, and 1½ million post-war. Of the pre-war houses, 6¼ million are still controlled.

(ii.) That these houses are sub-divided into various categories as set out on the table shown below:—

Category.	(a) Number of pre-war houses.	(b) Estimated number of pre-war houses decontrolled.	(c) Number of new houses.	(d) Total of columns (a) and (c).
High (1920 Act)	100,000	Almost all as being in owner's occupation, or let on long lease	40,000	140,000
Medium (1919 Act)	750,000	220,000	314,000	1,064,000
Low (1915 Act)	6,550,000 of which 5,000,000 are within the compounding limits	820,000 of which 625,000 are within the compounding limits	1,306,000*	7,856,000
All categories	7,400,000	1,140,000	1,660,000	9,060,000

* Municipal, 582,500; Private Enterprise, 723,500 = 1,306,000.

From this table it is estimated that in the high category substantially all, or nearly 100 per cent., of the pre-war houses are decontrolled.

In the middle category nearly 30 per cent. are decontrolled. In the low category about 1/8th or 12½ per cent. only are decontrolled.

On the assumption that the houses in the higher categories and the private enterprise houses in the lower category have been built for purchase or owner-occupation, the Committee estimate that the supply of houses for these classes has been increased by about 50 per cent., whereas for the low category renting class, who cannot afford to buy, the percentage increase of houses is only about 10 per cent. of the pre-war accommodation.

It is stated in the Report that it is assumed that all the houses provided by local authorities fall in the lowest (1915) category. I shall be interested to hear the views of other members upon this assumption. I incline to the view that for the greater number of the poor classes the houses provided have been beyond their means or beyond their education in health and hygiene.

IV.—HOUSING POSITION.

The Committee next proceeds to consider the housing position, and they suggest that for the working class who rent their houses the shortage is still acute, but that for the other classes the shortage has been or is being steadily overtaken.

The Committee on the subject of the housing shortage, while paying tribute to the great work done by the building societies, point out that all this work has been done in favour of the person who is able to purchase his house, and it seems clear that the greater proportion of the new houses being built have been bought by the middle classes and by the better-paid workers. Few houses have been built for the poorer-working classes, and those who can only afford to rent houses. Since the War more than £1,000,000,000 (one thousand million) has been spent in building 1½ million new houses. This enormous effort has produced no benefit to the poorest classes. The reasons which the Committee give are, firstly, that large as is the increase in the number of houses, it must be considered in relation to other factors such as the increase of working-class families, and, secondly, that the " filtering up " process has not taken place.

The Committee proceeds to a consideration of the reasons for the lack of this " filtering up " process and to the reason why there has been a lack of mobility in the working classes, which is shown by the fact that on the figures supplied by the Ministry of Labour 7/8ths of the working classes have in fact not moved ; and it goes on to suggest that if a large supply of three-bedroom houses could be built to let at a rent of about 10*s*. inclusive, these houses would go some way towards solving the problem of clear-ing the overcrowding and other conditions of the working classes. They also refer to the provisions contained in the 1930 Housing Act, which with its five-year programme of 100,000 houses to let each year should overcome the difficulty.

The Committee finally come to the conclusion after considerations of the housing problem:—

(i.) That the question of continuing or removing control is not one to be considered on the basis of an owner's rights in his property, but is to be decided on the question whether or no the shortage of houses in that particular class has or has not been overcome;

(ii.) That the shortage of the more expensive houses no longer eixsts;

(iii.) That the shortage of the middle-class houses is being rapidly met; and

(iv.) That the shortage of the lowest class of houses is still acute and there are not sufficient facts on which to prophesy when this shortage is likely to be overcome.

On this question of housing for the poorest classes the outlook does seem very confused. It is undoubtedly the determining factor in arriving at a conclusion about decontrol. In the past, private enterprise has provided houses for the poorest even up to the end of the nineteenth century, but at the present time this source of supply seems to have stopped definitely, and I see no prospect of its resumption in the near future.

The only hope would seem to be in "filtration," which is obviously a slow process. It is also one which needs a persistent amount of further education of the public in hygiene, a necessity which I suggest is not confined to the poorest classes.

We are at the moment caught in a vicious circle: the housing conditions are bad because people will not move into more sanitary conditions ; the people will not move because the Rent Restriction Acts give them security of tenure so long as they do not move ; control is maintained because the housing supply is insufficient. The proposal of Mr. E. D. Simon in his book on How to abolish the Slums seems to me the most atractive of the artificial methods at the present time. Apparently the only thing to do is to await the result of the first five years' working of the Housing Act, 1930, proposals as suggested by this Committee's Report.

As regards the comment made by the Committee upon the immobility of the occupants of the lower-rented houses, with a consequent lack of filtration or spreading into other houses with a resulting decrease of overcrowding, I suggest that members of the community are living in conditions below those they could well afford possibly because of the Rent Restriction Acts, and I think that considerable improvement could be secured if the local authorities were to put in force the bye-laws which they should administer against overcrowding. As these bye-laws are in some ways modified while the Rent Restriction Acts are in force, there would seem to be no reason why these duties should be neglected, and, further, the putting of them into force would have an educating effect upon the occupiers of houses affected.

I usually find when I have to take over a house from which a tenant has removed that the greater part of the premises are sub-let at stiff rents and nearly always overcrowded. Subject to adjustments of rents, it is my experience that improvement can be effected, and it is not difficult to get the tenant to pay the appropriate rent for the accommodation as soon as he realises that the alteration is being made because of legal or sanitary necessity.

The supineness of local authorities merely means that they are allowing avaricious or indifferently minded people to make money at the expense of the health of others and to create prejudice against property-owners in general.

V.—PROPOSED DECONTROL OF ALL HOUSES ABOVE A CERTAIN VALUE.

In Section V. the Committee proceeds to make recommendations, and it deals first with the question of decontrol. The conclusion is arrived at to divide those properties which are the subject of the Rent Restriction Acts at present into three classes called respectively Class A, Class B, and Class C. All those properties which are in Class A are to be decontrolled at once. Those in Class B are to remain controlled, but the provision at present existing that where a house becomes legally vacant the premises do become automatically decontrolled shall still obtain. In the case of those in Class C, all the houses in this class are to remain controlled and subject to the provisions of the Rent Restrictions Act, except in the case of those particular houses which by reason of existing legislation have become decontrolled.

The houses included in Class A are all those which are above a rateable value of £45 at April, 1931, in the Metropolitan Police District, £35 in the rest of England and Wales, and in Scotland all those houses above a yearly value in the Valuation Roll of 1931-32 of £45.

Taking a sample from the borough of Shoreditch, it would seem that a house of a rateable value of £45 at April, 1931, had in 1914 a rateable value of £38. It would appear from this that the effect of this recommendation with regard to Class A would immediately remove from control nearly all those houses which were included in the higher and middle categories or about 850,000 houses, of which about one-third have already become decontrolled.

It may be that these higher-rented houses are in the more valuable areas where redevelopment is likely to take place and that thereby the opportunity may to some extent be removed to demand what the Committee calls a premium, but in the case of some unprincipled persons may be called extortion.

Class A.—I am not clear what will happen in the case of a variation of rateable value. Suppose a house is from some cause increased at a subsequent revaluation from below £45 to more than £45 rateable value, will that house become automatically decontrolled or is the date April, 1931, to be the absolute determining factor? As I understand the proposal, the date is to override the subsequent higher value, but I suggest the point is worth consideration.

VI.—THE TWO CLASSES OF HOUSES TO BE RETAINED UNDER CONTROL.

Now with regard to Classes B and C, both are to be retained under the Rent Restriction Acts, but in respect of Class B it is recommended that when a house becomes legally vacant the present law shall continue and the house will become automatically decontrolled. But with regard to Class C, this will consist of the poorest and lowest-rented type of tenement, and it is recommended that these properties in Class C shall remain for the present persistently controlled and that the existing provisions as to de-control shall no longer apply.

The houses to be included in Class B are the following:—

In the Metropolitan District, above £20 up to £45 rateable value.
In the rest of England and Wales, above £13 up to £35.
In Scotland, above £26 5*s*. up to £45.

Class C.—In arriving at the principle as to which houses should be included in Class C, the basis was adopted of the line of the compounding limits or the limit of rateable value below which the rating authority can require the owner to be liable for the rates and not the tenant. There are only two variations from this basic line. In the Administrative County of London the compounding limit is £20. For these purposes the £20 as applicable to houses to be retained in Class C is extended to cover the area of the Metropolitan Police District.

Outside London and the Metropolitan Police District the compounding limit of £16 5*s*. for Liverpool has been brought into line with the remainder of the country, and £13 is adopted for the whole of the country.

There is a simplification in this classification which is, I suggest, all to the good. Up to the present, in deciding what property comes within the purview of these Acts, we have had to consider "standard rent," "net rent," or rateable value. This recommendation fixes one standard only, namely, rateable value, and it fixes the rateable value which is at the same time the most recent and which is based on realities and not on past values.

As the categories of higher-rented houses are to be removed from control, it is only necessary to consider the remaining recommendations in the Report from the point of view of those left. Unfortunately this is by far the largest class, amounting apparently to about 6¼ millions of pre-war houses, of which about 4¼ millions are within the compounding limits. I do not believe there is any royal road to the easing of the situation with regard to the condition of these poorer tenants of the lowest category. It is bound to be a slow process, and I believe that the relief will be more generally solved by "filtration" than by any other panacea.

There seems to be some amount of apprehension that on decontrol there would be a large increase in rent. It is suggested in the Committee's Report that the evidence in front of them suggests an increase of about 85 per cent. to 90 per cent. beyond pre-war rent, as compared with the 50 per cent. increase permitted by the Rent Restrictions Act. My small experience does not lead me to think that the increases would be as much as this; and if one has to speak in these general terms, I should have thought an increase of 10 per cent. to 20 per cent. beyond the permitted increases would represent a more normal figure.

In connection with this question of increase of rent, I think an important point which is lost sight of, or at any rate which is not referred to, is that this should be considered in connection with the effect of the proper enforcement of bye-laws. I am referring in particular to the bye-laws against overcrowding. It is admitted, and it is unhappily the experience of every surveyor who looks into the case, that overcrowding is the prevailing evil in the case of the poorer classes of property.

The Health Authorities have arrived at definite minimum cubic capacities and floor space which must be available for each individual, namely, either 400 cubic feet, or in the latest bye-laws of the Ministry of Health 40 square feet of floor space in the case of a room 8 feet high. My experience, which I admit is limited, is that if on decontrol I limit the occupation or re-arrange the occupation so that these conditions are complied with, I am faced with the fact that the tenant cannot pay, and the owner cannot expect the same rent as the respective parties might have been paying hitherto, because the tenant cannot sub-let in healthy conditions to that extent which will produce him sufficient money to enable him to pay the rent which he has been hitherto paying to his landlord. This means an all-round adjustment of rent. I suggest, therefore, that if the local authorities were properly to administer the bye-laws as they ought to do, the result would be, in the case of the older properties, a substantial check upon the indiscriminate increases of rent. I would almost go as far as to say that I believe the rent could be increased little, if indeed anything, above the present permitted increases.

VII.—MORTGAGES.

In the case of mortgages, the Committee recommend that where property is controlled, the existing mortgage shall also remain controlled and the restrictions upon mortgages should not be removed. I think that for an impartial observer this is obviously right. It would follow as a matter of course that where properties in Class A are freed from the Acts the mortgagee is also freed from them. To avoid a possibility of hardship, the Committee recommend that the restraining provisions with regard to mortgages should remain effective for a period of six months after the date at which the houses become freed from control. No doubt some awkward cases may occur, but as against this the mortgagee is empowered to charge an increased rate of interest up to 6½ per cent., a rate which is high and may cause the mortgagor to endeavour to get accommodation elsewhere at a lower rate if persisted in owing to depreciation of his equity.

VIII.—Decontrolled Houses.

If the recommendations of the Committee are accepted, the position will arise that, in Class C, houses already under control will remain controlled, but there will be some which have already become decontrolled under existing legislation.

After careful consideration the Committee say that they do not recommend that the control should be reimposed upon those houses. There seems to be some amount of confusion about this, and I have seen it definitely stated that the control is to be re-imposed. I think it cannot therefore be too emphatically reiterated that those houses which are already decontrolled are not to be brought under control again.

IX.—Permitted Increase of Rent.

Apparently the Committee was asked to recommend a reduction in rent on the grounds that, amongst other things, wages had fallen and unemployment had increased, and in other cases request was made for an increase of rent on the allegation that the present allowance was not sufficient to enable proper repairs to be carried out. The recommendation in the Report is that no increase should be permitted nor is a reduction recommended.

I suggest that this coincides with the general experience of most people dealing with ordinary conscientious landlords and reasonable tenants that the present allowances are sufficient for ordinary purposes. It should not be forgotten in this connection that there is an opportunity for an increase of rent calculated as a percentage on the amount of money spent in structural alterations, so that if the requirements of the Housing Acts were effectively pressed by the local authorities with regard to reconditioning, &c., an opportunity would arise for an adequate return upon the money so expended.

X.—ENFORCEMENT OF REPAIRS.

While the Committee do not recommend any increase for repairs, they draw attention to the fact that they have received a substantial amount of evidence that in many districts repairs are not being adequately carried out. It is certainly remarkable, but it seems to be generally true, that tenants are very chary of applying for certificates from the local authorities for the enforcement of proper repairs. I am bound to say that, in my limited experience, I do not remember a case occurring, although I quite agree that in one or two cases there has been a threat to apply for such a certificate, and when this has occurred, this threat has been sufficient to enable me to get from the owners instructions to satisfy the tenant.

There is no doubt that local authorities are quite efficiently provided with powers under the Housing Act and the Public Health Act to ensure the maintenance of property in a reasonable and proper state of repair in those cases where the owner neglects.

My own commentary on this would be that the local authorities do not take a sufficiently broad or effective view of what are the repairs which should be enforced. Most notices are concerned with such things as distempering of a wall, restoring sash-fasteners, &c., all necessary things, but not nearly so necessary as the remedying of rising damp, the effective pointing of brickwork, the restoration of rotted woodwork to window-sashes and frames, &c., and the restoration of paintwork. I believe that more consequential damage and misery is caused to occupiers by neglect to paint than almost anything else. I am sure that those who have seen what, if I may use a slang expression, I call " moral uplift " of most tenants as a result of the removal of the shabby and depressing appearance of a house will agree with me in this.

On this question of enforcement of repairs, I have often wondered why the requisition of the works is left to the sanitary inspector instead of to the surveyor. I think the sanitary inspector is in this respect (dare I say?) inefficient, and if the necessity arises for demands for repair to be made in respect of a house a more effective result would be attained by the surveyor.

I see no reason why defects in a building should be allowed to the detriment of a tenant any more than the drainage of a house should be allowed to be defective.

I think, therefore, the recommendations of this Committee, that the tenant's rights under the Rent Restriction Acts, with regard to repairs, should be brought more clearly home to them, is quite a right and proper provision.

XI.—POSSESSION.

This is, I suggest, one of the most vexed questions in connection with the Rent Restriction Acts. The Committee do not recommend any material relaxation of the definition of " alternative accommodation." At the same time, they think that it might be extended to include a house provided by the local authority, and provided the conditions as to security of tenure, namely, that the tenant shall hold the house on the same terms as if the house were a controlled house and the tenant a statutory tenant, that house should satisfy the definition which is certified by the local authority to be similar to such provided houses.

The Committee also suggest that it may be possible in certain cases to rehouse the tenants on part of the site leaving the remainder available for other development.

They also suggest that instead of the Court having to consider the actual availability of alternative accommodation at the time of making an application, the Court should be able to take into account accommodation which will be available when the order for possession becomes effective.

They also suggest that the reason why the landlord requires the house should carry less weight than it does at present, and that it should be sufficient to satisfy the Court that there is alternative accommodation.

The case of owners who desire their own houses for occupation is specially considered, and attention drawn to the opportunity given to an owner who purchased before 5th May, 1924, to prove that greater hardship would be caused by refusing than granting the application for possession. It is recommended that this power be extended to include owners who have purchased their houses at any time before the date of this Report.

With the exception of this last recommendation, I am afraid I feel that very little of the owner's hardship under this question of possession is varied or mitigated. I hope I may be shown to be wrong. I agree that the higher-rented houses are removed from this disability by decontrol, but the lowest category is still to be controlled on the ground of continued shortage and the existence of overcrowding. The difficulty of showing alternative accommodation will, therefore, be as great as before, and unless the Courts adopt a broader view of alternative accommodation, the cause for complaint will remain.

I suggest that the really serious blot at the moment in connection with this question of possession is the abnormal claim which can be made, and which, to judge from examples, is being made, by one or more individual tenants of small tenements holding up a large improvement in important available areas by claiming extortionate sums out of all proportion to the value of their interest or holding.

I have sometimes thought that in cases such as these there should be opportunity to bring them before some tribunal similar to that in force under the Landlord and Tenant Act, where upon proof of the necessary facts compensation just and even generous could be assessed which would dispose of these extortionate claims.

At the present time legal decisions have held that these redevelopments of valuable areas are not improvements in the public interest, and so claim makers are emboldened to persist in their demands.

I may be oversanguine, but I suggest that the existence of some such tribunal and liability to pay and receive a sum assessed on fair and equitable lines would reduce the number of cases which would come before such a tribunal to a comparatively small number, and the apparent difficulty in finding alternative accommodation by the tenant would in most cases fade away.

XII.—FURNISHED LETTINGS.

I have no comment to make under this heading.

XIII.—SUB-LETTING OF UNFURNISHED ROOMS.

On the question of sub-letting the Committee are of opinion that sub-letting should be allowed to continue, and they are not favourable to suggestions which were put forward that the landlord should be the arbiter as to whether sub-letting may exist or not. I assume that this recommendation refers only to those cases where the sub-letting complies in its terms with the bye-laws in force in the district. I do not expect that the Committee intend a general statement such as this to refer to cases where the sub-letting has produced overcrowding or other sanitary troubles.

The Committee realises that the conditions in respect of houses which are retained under control are such that sub-letting, at any rate for the present, is necessary. I think this is the correct view, but, as I have stated elsewhere, there is the serious question of overcrowding to consider. Overcrowding is a matter of ignorance or indifference or greed on the part of both owners and occupiers, and in a good many cases I think also ignorance or indifference on the part of surveyors and estate agents.

It is not sufficient for landlords to complain that a tenant is sub-letting at abnormal figures ; the position very frequently is that the landlord obtains the biggest rent which he can command for a particular house which someone will be prepared to give him for various reasons, such as nearness to centre, available position, chance of profit, &c.

I postulate that the tenant cannot afford to pay all this rent for occupation wholly by himself and his family, and the only way in which he can pay it is for him to sub-let to the fullest extent, having an eye, just as his landlord did, to only one point, the largest amount of rent he can secure for a given quantity of accommodation. Both parties entirely ignore the hygienic side ; as a result the house is hopelessly overcrowded, and the amenities, such as water supply, water-closet accommodation, and sometimes even light and air, are inadequate.

I do not consider that the fault for this can be placed entirely on the shoulders of the original tenant. I think the owner is equally responsible in demanding a rent which the present accommodation will not justify whatever may be the rental obtainable if another form of occupation or development were available. I have come to the conclusion that in those cases where premises are sub-let, there should be some form of compulsory notification exhibited in the house, somewhat similar to notices in factories and other buildings, setting out a statement of the maximum number of people who are permitted, according to the bye-laws, to occupy each room. I suggest that the effect of this would be that the original tenant would not be able to pay more than a certain amount of rent for premises in respect of which this hygienic notice was existing, nor could the landlord secure more. If in addition the line of least resistance was departed from and common-sense applied to make all the parties to a complaint of overcrowding liable for penalties, the mutual reaction of the various parties would tend automatically to reduce overcrowding, and I think a further incidental result would be that, whether there be restriction or no, rent would tend to be kept at a reasonable figure and the opportunity for excessive rent would be considerably reduced.

It may be said that I am not confining myself to rent restriction ; if so, I must plead guilty. My excuse must be that rent restriction and house control is so closely bound up and part of the general housing problem that I think it cannot be divorced from those surrounding considerations which ought to have their bearing on the housing problem, which really is the fons et origo of the question of rent restriction.

Anything and everything should be tried which will educate both landlord and tenant to greater responsibility, and awaken them from ghastly apathy to a recognition and appreciation of better available conditions.

XIV. AND XV.—RENT COURTS.

The Committee do not recommend the appointment of a rent court tribunal, nor do they accept a proposal which was put forward that the landlord should be free to deal with his property subject only to the control of rent.

It is a very attractive proposition, but, to my mind, the rent is not by any means the principal trouble in connection with rent restriction. As I understand it, the principal object of these Acts is to secure that a tenant shall retain a roof over his head and shall not be thrown into the street. Some restriction of rent necessarily follows this primary consideration. If rent only were controlled, it would seem that the tenant would lose a home and the landlord would by the control of rent be debarred from redeveloping his property to the best advantage.

XVI.—RATING QUESTIONS.

The Committee advise the repeal of Section 12 (9) of the 1920 Act which provided for reduced assessments for rating in respect of houses erected or converted after 2nd April, 1919, and which are, therefore, out of the scope of the controlling provisions. Originally designed to encourage the provision of housing accommodation, the clause has outlived its usefulness and should be repealed on the ground of fair and equitable rating. I expect most surveyors have had some experience of the profits, abnormal in many cases, made by speculators out of this clause.

The Committee also dealt with the case of Nicholson v. Jackson, H.L., 1921, which decided that an owner who was subject to compounding regulations regarding local rates with the concurrent allowance of a percentage reduction for early payment in one lump sum could only claim back from his tenant the actual amount paid translated into terms of weekly rent, and he could not collect by those weekly payments the full amount of the rates including the percentage reduction which were due if he did not compound.

The Committee agree that the practice is unfair, but they nevertheless decide to recommend that the existing position shall not be altered, and they give a reason which does not seem to me satisfying.

I understand the paragraph to mean that in the event of the decision of Nicholson v. Jackson being altered, owners should be entitled to claim retrospectively. If it does not mean that, I see no more difficulty in adjusting the rents to the altered conditions as from the date of the alteration of the law than there is at the present time in making the adjustments of the existing amount paid. I do think it is unfair that an owner should be expected to pay the rates in a lump sum and be given a percentage allowance for cash, and that then he should be expected to pass on that benefit to the tenant and give the tenant credit with a possible risk of not receiving any, or at any rate only a portion, of the money at all.

XVII.—Premises partly used for Business.

The Committee do not recommend any variation from the effect of the Epsom case ruling that a building which is partly a shop and partly a dwelling-house is included in the Act. They base their recommendation upon the anticipation that an alteration would create a hardship in the case of small shopkeepers whose trade is in a depressed state.

I have no comment to make on this recommendation which I think is sound. If the shop is let separately from the dwelling-house, there are two tenements, and the question of inclusion in the Act does not arise in respect of the shop.

It should be borne in mind that as the higher-rented houses have been removed from control, it is most likely that a very large proportion of shops will become decontrolled ; consequently those shops only will remain affected of which the modern rateable value of the house and shop is £45 or under, which would comprise mostly the small trader who lives over his shop.

I do think, however, that some distinction should be made in the case of a tenant who sub-lets the dwelling portion of the house.

Notice should also be taken of the fact that traders have now acquired additional protection under the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927. When his interest in the shop is such that he no longer needs or wishes to continue the business, it is suggested that he is not in need of protection for the dwelling-house portion, the occupation of which would possibly be damaging to the letting for business.

XVIII.

Under this heading we practically come to the end of the recommendations. There are here two or three small adjustments which are rather consequential to the recommendations if they are accepted. It may happen that one building, a Class A house, as a whole does in fact contain lettings which bring such tenements under the categories of B and C, and it is recommended that the decontrol of the subsidiary tenement shall not be affected until the landlord or tenant of the whole house obtains vacant possession of the subsidiary tenement.

A similar state of things is recommended in the case where a dwelling-house in Class B contains subsidiary tenements in Class C.

These recommendations would seem to detract somewhat from the relief afforded by the removal of the larger-rented houses from control. Presumably, however, the Committee felt that this was necessary, but I feel a little difficulty as to how this works, particularly with regard to Class C houses. This recommendation suggests that the tenant of a Class A house, having a Class C tenant, can obtain possession and decontrol of a Class C sub-tenancy. On the other hand, it has been recommended earlier in the Report that Class C houses shall remain permanently controlled. Is it intended to draw a distinction between a Class C house and a Class C sub-tenancy?

There is a particular reference that where a person is enjoying as tenant the protection of the Acts he shall not be entitled to obtain decontrol of premises sub-let by him even though he come into vacant possession of them.

To deal with the question of decontrol in the case of Class C houses, the Committee recommends that a register should be kept of all houses which at a date to be specified are already decontrolled in the Class C. The obligation is to be placed upon the landlord to give notice and to see that the house is registered with the local authority as decontrolled. If this has not been done within a specified period, the house is deemed to be controlled.

Another minor recommendation deals with the fixing of standard rent. The evidence of a period so far back as August, 1914, is sometimes difficult to obtain, and it is recommended that in such circumstances the Court shall have a discretion to fix the standard rent by reference to adjoining comparable houses.

The Committee also recommend that the Acts shall be consolidated, a belated action which I hope does not mean either a fixation of the Act or the start of a fresh era of alterations.

XIX.

In their conclusion the Committee have something to say on the subject of the argument which was put forward to them that if control is removed private enterprise will at once start to produce the houses, to which proposition the Committee is not prepared to assent.

I quite agree that rent restriction alone is not the only element which prevents private enterprise from producing houses of the poorest class, but any form of control does check private enterprise and particularly any form of control which tends to reduce a justifiable profit obtainable upon a modern production.

Municipal building, with subsidies, is of course another form of check upon private enterprise, and municipal enterprise has not been building for the needy class ; it has been building for the artisan and well-to-do class.

The Committee draw attention in their Report to this, and suggest that the need of better-class houses has been so well met that the shortage has been overtaken, or will very shortly be overtaken. The Committee, however, agree as a fact that no provision has been made for houses for renting up to about 10*s*. to 12*s*. per week.

Efforts are certainly being made in this direction, and at a housing enquiry of one of the London boroughs, which I recently attended, an attempt is being made to provide two-and-three-roomed flats at rents about 7*s*. to 10*s*. per week. But while municipal authorities with State subsidies will be able to make these attempts, I personally do not see likelihood of private enterprise at the present time attempting to supply this need with any chance of a moderate return upon the outlay. At the risk of seeming retrograde, I suggest that in this endeavour to provide for the very poorest of the community the lowest standard must be adopted—shall I say lower than that hitherto entertained?—provided always that the accommodation supplied and the occupation must be such as will give an entirely healthy environment.

Summarising, I think that the owners' benefits obtained from this Report are the following:—

- (i.) Higher-rented houses and the mortgages upon them removed from control ;
- (ii.) The definition of " alternative accommodation " is extended ;
- (iii.) There is an extension of the class of people who may claim possession where possession is desired for own occupation. Further powers are given where extortionate sub-letting by tenants exists ;
- (iv.) Registration of decontrolled Class C houses.

The tenants' benefits are:—

- (i.) Control confirmed on the lower-rented houses ;
- (ii.) No increase beyond the present permitted increase of rent ;
- (iii.) The rights of tenants to secure repairs to their houses emphasised ;
- (iv.) Protection for controlled sub-tenants in decontrolled houses.

In conclusion, my deductions from reading this Report are that a very large number of houses will continue to be the subject of control, and apparently the greater proportion of them will not be able to be removed from control for a considerable number of years.

This system of control cannot be divorced from the general housing question, and in respect of the poorest of the community there seems small chance of private enterprise resuming the provision of houses for them.

The remedying of those conditions of affairs will be a long and slow process. It is not a matter which can be done by direct action to that end, and the remedy must be found—

- (i.) By the continuing of the rebuilding of the better and larger houses for the more fortunate members of the community.

(ii.) By the reconditioning of the existing houses and their gradual improvement.

(iii.) By the steady and persistent enforcement of the bye-laws, making for this gradual improvement in the amenities of the family.

(iv.) By the enforcement of more efficient sanitary requirements and sanitary supervision, having for its effect the substantial improvement of the more serious items of sanitary defects.

(v.) The encouragement by these means of a greater mobility on the part of the poorest section of the community, thereby enabling them as a whole to live in less crowded conditions.

(vi.) The abandonment, as soon as possible, of subsidised municipal building, and the stopping of any further municipal building except the supplying of the absolute minimum accommodation for the very poorest class of the community, which apparently must be under poor law or eleemosynary conditions.

As a last word I would say that it must be a cause of great gratification to those in charge of the welfare of our Institution, as it is I am sure to all members, to observe, from the terms in which the evidence of the representatives of this Institution and of the London County Council was received, how great is the respect and consideration the Committee has given to those witnesses who are all members of our Council.

A DISCUSSION took place on Mr. E. W. EASON'S Paper entitled

A CONSIDERATION OF THE RENT RESTRICTION ACTS COMMITTEE'S REPORT.

Mr. H. E. SHERWIN (Member of Council), in proposing a vote of thanks to Mr. Eason for his valuable Paper, remarked that if any proof were needed of the friendly feeling between the Auctioneers' and Estate Agents' Institute and the Chartered Surveyors' Institution it was supplied that evening in the presence of Mr. Eason, who, of course, gave expert evidence on behalf of the former body before the Departmental Committee over which Lord Marley presided.

With qualifications, he thought they could agree that the proposals put forward by the Committee were in present circumstances reasonably equitable as between landlords and tenants. Without any qualification whatever, they must all agree that the Report was fair-minded, free from political bias, and the result of patient and scientific research. Again, with some qualifications, they could agree that both landlords and tenants might get as much as they expected, and possibly more than they hoped.

He was glad to see the reference at the beginning of the Paper to the fact that certain associations were independent for expressing opinions upon such a question as rent restriction. He thanked Lord Marley, who was present, for acknowledging that fact in the Report as regards The Chartered Surveyors' Institution.

With reference to the difference between house-owners and the owners of other real property, he would suggest that the owners of house property were to-day in a more favourable position than the owners of agricultural property. The former were receiving 40 per cent. in excess of the pre-war rents, while a large number of owners of agricultural property was much more likely to be receiving 40 per cent. below pre-war rents.

The author had stated that the restrictions were a war-time measure aimed at securing homes for tenants. He preferred the wording of the Report, that they were a war measure aimed at preventing the exaction of scarcity rents due to the stoppage of house building during the War, particularly in the industrial towns and in centres engaged in the manufacture of munitions.

The author went on to point out that the Report referred to the building since the War of about 1½ million houses. It was an astounding fact that these 1,660,000 houses had cost the large sum of £1,000,000,000, equivalent to £1,200 per pair. Of course that represented houses in all three grades, and it did not necessarily follow that they had been erected in pairs, though in most of the housing schemes they were so erected or in groups of four. Since the War, in the lowest category, 20 per cent. additional houses had been added. It was worthy of note that 723,500, or 55 per cent., of those houses in that category had been built by private enterprise.

The author stated that he was inclined to the view that for the greater number of the poorer class the houses provided had been beyond their means. The speaker's business took him all over the midland and northern parts of England; he had been interested in many housing schemes; and he had been astonished to find, from time to time, that a large number of those houses was occupied by the class for which he was sure they were never intended. Naturally there was still a shortage of working-class dwellings. The population of England and Wales, as the Report said, had increased in the past ten years by 2 millions, and the number of houses by about 1½ million. Giving four people per house, that should be sufficient accommodation for 6 millions, and, as there were only 2 million additional population, there appeared to be a surplus of 4 millions. It was surprising, as the Report said, that the shortage had not been met to a greater extent than was actually the case.

The author stated that private enterprise had provided houses for the poorest classes even up to the end of the nineteenth century, and that he saw no prospect of resumption in the near future. The speaker had had numerous conversations with builders who developed estates in his management, and had tried to elicit the reasons why they were not prepared to go forward with the erection of working-class dwellings. They invariably gave the same reason, namely, that it was due to their fears that the Government would not leave them alone, but would interfere with rents or prices. In the northern districts, before 1910, houses were built not necessarily for sale but to rent. Perhaps he should say that they also feared some legislation similar to the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910.

As to variation in rateable values, he had no doubt that once a house was in the controlled category it would remain in that category, because he could see no logical parry to the thrust that if a house went out, so if the ratable value dropped, the house should come in. It seemed an impossible position to have a free house suddenly brought under control owing to a decreased rateable value, and vice versa.

The author did not believe there was any way of easing the situation with respect to the poorer tenants in the lowest category. Certainly it was bound to be a slow progess, but it was a fact that during the last few months there had been an extraordinary change. One of his assistants had recently married and went to live at Clapham Common. Only last week he was telling him that in one road alone during one month there had been six or more good flats to let. This assistant had moved since his marriage into a better flat at a cheaper rent, and his old flat had been in the market again since it was relet. He was referring to flats which let at rents of 22*s*. to 25*s*. a week. He stated that the worse class of flats were coming into the market rapidly. That appeared to be some indication of an easing of the situation.

With reference to mortgages, perhaps, with the Chairman of the Departmental Committee present, he had better not say too much, because when he gave evidence before the Committee he was there to support what was said in The Institution's précis of evidence. A member of the Committee, however, asked him his personal view, and he regretted to say that his personal view did not coincide with the view in the précis. But he was pleased to note that the Committee appeared to have adopted his personal view. The argument, of course, was that those who borrowed on a free market should not be compelled to reborrow on a controlled market. There was just the snag that, if properties fell in value, the security to-day, with the increased rent allowed by the Rent Restriction Acts, might provide a better security than a lower rent some years hence.

He rather regretted that the author had not given more prominence to the Duke of Westminster's Millbank scheme, because that was one of the suggestions put forward by The Institution, namely, that a property-owner should be able to go to a local authority and say "I want possession of " this house, and am prepared to contribute so much if you " will undertake to rehouse the occupier." The Report stated (page 37) that schemes such as that at Westminster would have been impossible without the special powers obtained by the City Council in a private Act of 1929, and that schemes of this kind should be possible without the necessity of obtaining special Parliamentary powers.

It was interesting in connection with the author's remarks on alternative accommodation to read paragraph 77 of the Committee's Report, which stated that much of the complexity of the present law was due to the fact that, broadly speaking, regard was had not merely to the question whether alternative accommodation was available, but also the reason why the landlord wanted possession of his house, and the Committee went on to say that if there was to be a list of such reasons, it certainly should be extended to include, for example, the carrying out of desirable housing, industrial or commercial developments. The Committee, however, did not consider the extension of the present list to be the proper method of dealing with the problem. It seemed to him that there was something helpful in paragraph 77 from the point of view of those redevelopment schemes which hitherto had been held up.

On the question of sub-letting of unfurnished houses, the author said that the Committee was of opinion that sub-letting should be allowed to continue, but he (the author) did not think that the Committee could be referring to sub-lettings which produced overcrowding or other sanitary troubles. He (the speaker) could find nothing in the Report to support the view that where overcrowding took place any power of interference was to be given to the landlord. The author stated that the position very frequently was that the landlord obtained the biggest rent which he could command for a particular house. He did not know whether Mr. Eason was referring to controlled or decontrolled houses; if he was referring to controlled houses he (the speaker) did not understand the paragraph. Then the author went on to say: "The only way in which he [the tenant] can pay "it [the rent] is for him to sub-let to the fullest extent, "having an eye, just as his landlord did, to only one point, "the largest amount of rent he can secure for a given "quantity of accommodation." If it was a controlled house the tenant should be securing only 40 per cent. increase plus the sub-letting allowance. It was not a free but a controlled market. According to the Report (page 44), dealing with extortionate charging by a statutory tenant, it was suggested that the landlord should have the right to apply for possession; that statutory tenants should notify landlords if they were sub-letting; that a penalty should be imposed in certain cases for extortionate charges to sub-tenants; and that power should be given to local authorities to set up committees to give information and advice.

With regard to The Institution's suggestion of rent control only, he would not say anything more than that he did not think that the author had perhaps quite understood what had been proposed. He had said that if rent only were controlled it would seem that the tenant could lose a home, and the landlord would, by control of rent, be debarred from redeveloping his property to the best advantage. The Institution's suggestion (page 47 of the Report) was that the landlords should have restored to them complete freedom to manage and control their property, but not to raise rents above the legal maximum so long as they desired to continue to let the property. That would leave landlords free to close or pull down if they did not wish to let.

He did not understand the author's reference to the case of Nicholson v. Jackson. He could see nothing there to suggest that the claim should be made retrospective.

In paragraph XVIII. he thought that perhaps the author had not appreciated that two different grounds were suggested by the Committee for Class A and Class B houses in regard to the decontrol of subsidiary tenements. As regards Class A, the recommendations were that if the landlord or tenant came into possession of a subsidiary C tenement, that tenement would be decontrolled, but in the case of a dwelling-house in Class B containing a subsidiary C tenement, the subsidiary tenement C would only be decontrolled if the landlord came into possession. The reason he thought was clear. If one took a Class A property, the landlord and tenant of the whole were free ; but when one came to the Class B house, one would have the tenant of the whole a statutory tenant, and it would, therefore, be manifestly unfair if he were allowed to come into possession of a subsidiary C tenement and have it free of control to his gain but not also to his landlord's.

The author stated that the Committee recommended that the Act should be consolidated, " a belated action which " I hope does not mean either a fixation of the Act or the " start of a fresh era of alterations." The Committee had been careful in page 50 of the Report to state that the Acts had now been made the subject of a great number of legal decisions, and to express the view that " it would be " unwise to recommend alterations in the language of the " Acts for the sake of effecting minor improvements." That should allay the author's fears.

With these remarks he would move a most hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Eason for his Paper.

Mr. Harold Griffin (Chartered Surveyor), in seconding the vote of thanks to Mr. Eason for his Paper, congratulated him on the impartial manner in which he himself had dealt with this thorny subject.

The speaker had given evidence before the Committee on behalf of another organisation whose members did not appreciate the Report with so much satisfaction, although he readily agreed that the Committee had given him a very patient hearing.

Mr. Eason did not actually say that the needs of the community must prevail over the rights of owners, but he inferred that course met with his approval.

Owners did not object to the rents of the houses in Class C (that is to say up to £20 rateable value in London) continuing to be restricted, nor to their right of dealing with their own property being curtailed until the supply of such houses was sensibly increased, but they thought the benefits arising from the restrictions ought to be confined to the persons for whom they were originally designed.

If a house became vacant, whether it fell within Class C or any other class, no one had any moral right to step into it on any other terms than the reasonable rent and conditions obtainable in the open market. The owner was still under all the obligations imposed by the Housing Acts and the Public Health Act.

The Rent Restriction Acts had created a privileged class of people. Although the tenant's estate could not be sold or bequeathed, it was substantially greater than the so-called parson's freehold in his benefice, because it was practically hereditary. When the early demise of a statutory tenant was anticipated, relatives were anxious to take up their abode with him and attend on him during his last illness! When his death occurred his relatives successfully claimed the benefit of the statutory tenancy.

Granted that there was still a necessity for the continuation of those restrictions as a temporary measure, he still contended that the community should remove that necessity as soon as it could reasonably be done.

As Mr. Eason had told them, the whole question of control and restricted rents could not be divorced from the provision of houses for the poorest classes, and the supply of the necessary accommodation for them must be more or less obtained by subsidies or under poor law conditions.

The Report referred to evidence the Committee received that the local authorities were reluctant to provide houses for the poorest classes.

If the sense of the community was offended by the existence of overcrowding and so-called slums, it must be the business of the local authorities to remedy those matters. Owners of houses could not do it.

The problem must be approached in a quite different form than hitherto. When local authorities had erected a number of houses or a block of tenements, they had up to now proceeded to let them in the same way as members would themselves if acting for a client, that was by selecting the most respectable persons in regular employment, earning good wages, and likely to pay rent punctually.

That might be highly desirable for an owner, but was of little value towards improved housing for the poorest classes.

With regard to the occupants of houses in what was defined by the Housing Act, 1930, as a clearance area, a local authority must provide accommodation for them in advance of their displacement. That was a distinct advance in a much-needed direction.

The public and the persons who were to be rehoused, however, should understand that the process was in the nature of charity forced on poor people who did not ask for it, and who made little complaint about their present dwellings. They considered it a hardship to be compelled to move, and it cut right across the present necessity for rigid economy in public expenditure and for reduction in taxation.

He was not referring to basements or cellars or to overcrowded tenement houses, but to the hundreds of thousands of small cottages, in most cases occupied by one family only, which the present authorities regarded as obsolete, but to which they would have raised no objection a few years ago.

There were several other matters wherein owners thought the Committee might have recommended improvements in the law without inflicting any real hardship on anybody, but he would not weary the meeting by enumerating them. The absence of any reference to them in the Report was not because there was any neglect in bringing them to the notice of the Committee, but on the whole he agreed with Mr. Eason that the Committee had done their best to adjust the conflicting interests of owners and tenants. The negligible increase in accommodation suitable for the occupiers of Class C houses was the real reason for their refusal to go further towards decontrol.

Mr. Eason had dissected the Report in a very lucid manner, and they were very much indebted to him for it.

LORD MARLEY, D.S.C. (Chairman of the Inter-Departmental Committee on the Rent Restriction Acts) (Visitor), said that the Paper had been most sympathetic to the Report of his Committee, and from the discussion it appeared that members present also realised that the Report was, on the whole, a fair and balanced document. It was certainly not based on political compromise. He thought he was right in saying that it had been a clear case of team work, the sole object of which had been to produce a Report which met the real needs of the housing situation in Great Britain.

Somehow or other they had managed to hammer out a Report which he believed was impartial and balanced. That was due to the fairness of the members of the Committee, and to the way in which the witnesses on behalf of the various organisations concerned had helped the Committee in trying to come to a fair and balanced decision.

He thought he would be representing the feeling of the Committee when he said that the evidence given by The Chartered Surveyors' Institution was among the most valuable evidence they had heard. The tables which had been prepared by The Institution were peculiarly valuable in dealing with the question of repairs, and repairs, as those present would realise, were probably the most important reason why the Committee did not recommend any alteration in the 15 per cent. and 25 per cent., together amounting to 40 per cent., which was the permitted increase under the existing Rent Restriction Acts. The Committee felt that, provided they could get agreement to hold on to the 40 per cent., they must have on the one hand a realisation that that 40 per cent. was a fair amount, and, on the other hand, to balance it, a decision that repairs must in fact be carried out. He supposed that no evidence they had was more helpful to the Committee in that respect than the evidence given by The Institution.

He did not propose to detain the meeting with any description of the Committee's work. He was speaking to those who would have to work any Act which Parliament might carry through. He wanted to remind them, however, that Members of both Houses of Parliament were supremely ignorant on many of the subjects upon which they legislated. Mr. Bernard Shaw had pointed out that the House of Lords was far superior to the House of Commons in that the latter was a group of what he called "selected undesirables," whereas the House of Lords existed because every man was the son of his father. It was Bagehot who said that the Members of the House of Lords were there merely as the accident of an accident. Be that as it might, it was a fact, nevertheless, that much legislation was carried out by persons who were not experts in their subject.

With regard to Mr. Eason's very sympathetic and interesting Paper, it was not necessary for him to speak at any length. One point, however, on which he was interested was the question of alternative accommodation. The Committee had received an interesting piece of unofficial evidence bearing on that point, and he himself personally investigated the case. It was a case in central London in which a considerable industrial extension was being held up by one man, a controlled tenant, who refused to vacate his premises except on the payment of an enormous sum. This man had one room ; he was paying a rent, he believed, of 12*s.* a week, and he asked £3,000 to clear out. The tenant refused to move, and held up the rebuilding of a triangle for some 18 months. As a result the owners of the property were compelled to build an iron cage around this man's room and proceeded with the building of the property, leaving the cage in position. Finally the owner of the property decided not to continue his rebuilding, and as a result the tenant was eventually compelled to clear out on a payment of £100. That was a case of most intolerable injustice, and the sort of case the Committee attempted to deal with in the recommendations they had put forward.

From the Parliamentary point of view, if any section of the Report were omitted it would destroy the entire balance, and would free the opponents or supporters of one or another part of the Report from their obligations to support the Report as a whole. The Committee had agreed that, no matter what their political points of view, they would support the recommendations of the Report as a whole. His own party—the Socialist Party—believed that personal loyalty might be carried too far, but when it came to loyalty to an idea or to a decision based upon careful study of all the facts, they believed that loyalty was all-important. He thought he was right in saying that every member of the Departmental Committee would be loyal in supporting the recommendations of the Committee as a balanced contribution to an extremely difficult problem, and he commended to The Institution that idea of the balance of the whole Report. He knew that as individuals many of those he was addressing might not like certain aspects of the Report, yet he believed that they would give it general support as a carefully thought-out document, and in that case they would secure in the end the greatest good of the greatest number.

Captain Montagu Evans, M.C. (Chartered Surveyor), congratulated Mr. Eason on his admirable Paper, which he considered was a valuable contribution to contemporary thought on rent restriction.

The author had stated that owners of restricted property were in no worse position than other owners. Whilst that might be true, on a comparison with owners of agricultural property, it seemed to him that owners of urban property outside the Rent Restriction Acts must be better off, since they could deal with and develop their properties in the way they thought best. In fact, Mr. Eason had admitted later in his Paper that the development of property had been held up in many cases.

He wished to refer first of all to the statistical aspects of the Departmental Committee's inquiry. It seemed to him that the statement made by the Committee, that overcrowding showed no signs of improvement, was at variance with a later statement that the housing shortage was rapidly being overcome. The question of overcrowding was, to his mind, bound up with the immobility brought about by the unwillingness of tenants to remove to better conditions and surroundings when they were in a position to afford to do so. Local authorities could do a great deal towards mitigating overcrowding by forcing tenants on their housing estates to move to better houses as soon as they could afford it. He had read, recently, of several local authorities who had proceeded upon those lines, with, he believed, great success.

He was sure Mr. Eason was right when he said that the houses provided by local authorities, hitherto, had been beyond the means of the tenants for whom they were intended. He had long thought that local authorities should be prohibited from providing houses to let at more than 10*s*. a week. Many of the houses should be available at an even lower rent. If local authorities were so bound, private enterprise would once again step in and provide houses for people who could afford a higher rent than 10*s*., and would again proceed to build houses available for letting as in pre-war days. That might have been impracticable some years ago, but it was by no means impossible to-day having regard to the decrease in the cost of building.

Mr. Eason had said that overcrowding could be lessened if the local authorities were to enforce their bye-laws. He did not agree. In his experience, generally speaking, local authorities were anxious to get rid of overcrowding, and they would co-operate with owners to that end. They would co-operate by agreeing to serve overcrowding notices on the tenants as well as on the owners, but their efforts had been largely nullified by the unwillingness of County Court judges and magistrates to make orders for possession.

Many members would disagree with certain recommendations of the Committee, and for his own part he could not see why all the recommendations of the Committee must be adopted, as Lord Marley had urged, in order to preserve the value of the Report. In his view the limits for Class A houses were too high. A rateable value of £45 meant an inclusive rental of from 35*s*. to 45*s*. a week, roughly speaking. He thought that if there was to be a limit it should be a rateable value that would correspond to an inclusive rent of 25*s*. a week. It was comparatively easy now to purchase a house with a small payment down and a weekly instalment of 25*s*., and if the rateable value were reduced to basis of that limit, he thought there would be little hardship to tenants.

He agreed with what Mr. Griffin had said as to Class C houses. Permanent control was wrong and against public policy. Class C houses should not be under control for more than a further five years, because if the local authorities proceeded upon the lines laid down in the Housing Act and provided houses of the right type—that was to say, houses available for the poorer classes—in five years' time there would be a return to normal conditions of supply and demand which would establish a basis of post-war normal rental value.

Many would disagree with the statement in the Report that a large increase in rental was likely if restriction were removed altogether. Statistics, so far as they were available, proved that the average increase in rental over and above the permitted increase was only about 15 per cent., if sub-lettings by tenants were excluded. His impression, on reading the Report, was that the Committee had been influenced by taking sub-lettings into account.

Provision would have to be made for dealing with cases of mortgages or money put out upon mortgage belonging to the estate of a deceased person. It was impossible to wind up that estate in many cases while those mortgages were outstanding. It looked, moreover, as though mortgages on Class C houses would be permanently tied up if the recommendations of the Committee were accepted.

He thought they were generally in agreement with Mr. Eason that the permitted increases were fair, but he did not agree that there should be any strengthening of the powers as to the enforcement of repairs. Local authorities already had abundant powers to enforce repairs, and his experience was that in the classes of property coming within the Rent Restriction Acts, they did, in fact, use their powers to the limit. He thought, also, that tenants availed themselves of their right to suspend the increase of rent, where they were in a position to do so, by applying for a certificate.

With regard to possession, he thought that owners who had bought, no matter when, should be entitled to possession of their houses if they wished to occupy them themselves, provided that, if they failed to occupy them, they should be liable to pay compensation to the tenants displaced. He thought a similar scheme could be adopted with regard to improvements.

Mr. Frank Hunt, c.v.o. (Member of Council), said that Mr. Eason had rather suggested that local authority houses all came within what he called the lowest limit — that was the proposed lowest limit, £20 rateable value now, under present recommendations, as against the old low limit of £35. Mr. Eason wondered whether any of the local authority houses were outside that limit. Local authority houses which, after all, were not controlled—at any rate those built since the period of the War—were, generally speaking, well within the £35 limit, and some of them, particularly the early ones, would be outside the £20 limit.

Mr. Eason, summarising the opinion of the Committee as to the result of the expenditure on new houses of £1,000,000,000 since the War, had said: "This enormous "effort has produced no benefit to the poorest classes." The Committee had put the point in a much more guarded way, and assumed that that big expenditure had more effect upon the housing of the poorer classes than Mr. Eason seemed prepared to believe. The Committee in its Report stated: "It is clear, however, from the evidence that this "large number of new houses has not had the effect of "improving the conditions of the poorest workers to the "extent which might have been expected." Those words implied a view entirely different from that which Mr. Eason had suggested.

Again, Mr. Eason was not quite fair in his comment on the effect of the housing effort that had been made. He stated: "We are at the moment caught in a vicious circle; "the housing conditions are bad because people will not "move into more sanitary conditions ; the people will not "move because the Rent Restriction Acts give them "security of tenure so long as they do not move ; control "is maintained because the housing supply is insufficient." He could assure Mr. Eason that it was not because people would not move into sanitary conditions, but because the bulk of them were not able to pay for the better and more extensive accommodation which decency required they should occupy. It was true that the Rent Restriction Acts gave a sense of protection which they were not willing to forgo, but that was not the whole story.

Private enterprise had never provided proper new accommodation according to the standards of the time for the poorest part of the population. This had never been the case until the local authorities themselves thought it was their duty to provide such accommodation. In every civilisation, and at all times, the poorest part of the population had never been provided with anything like decent housing accommodation according to the standards of the time. There was no reason why it should not have been done, but it simply had not been done, and so far as experience went, it was not practicable to do it on any basis of economic production.

He agreed with Mr. Eason, and with Mr. Evans, with regard to the local authorities' attitude as to overcrowding. Much could be done, not by seeking generally to cure overcrowding at once, but, in the case of houses let to several families, by ensuring that when a room or a floor became vacant, nobody was permitted to occupy that room or floor other than the overcrowded families in the rest of the dwelling. One could not attempt to turn out people who were living in overcrowded conditions, because at the moment there was no accommodation available which those people could manage to rent.

The Report made it clear that in any future Acts, as in the existing Acts, a fixed date should appear in the statute as representing the standard for which to measure rent or rateable value. In the recommendation of the Report the fixed date was April 1st, 1931. Changes of rateable value after that date were quite immaterial for the purpose of the administration of the statute.

There was a much bigger question, however, which had not been dealt with so far in the present discussion. It was perhaps a problem peculiar to London. A large proportion of the working-class people in London were not living in structurally separate houses. Many of them were living on a floor or in a room of a bigger house. On reading the Report of the Committee it seemed at first to indicate that houses of a rateable value of £45 were to go out of control. There were many houses in London with such a rateable value occupied by separate families, not in structural separation, but living in separate rooms or on different floors, and it was obvious that unless there was to be a considerable upheaval with regard to that portion of the population, that particular class of occupation would require special attention in the statute which would follow the recommendations of the Departmental Committee. He believed that there were some recommendations in the Committee's Report that might cover that point, but it was definitely stated that houses of a certain rateable value should go out of control. That might have been because it was not present to the minds of the Committee that, unless a house was either originally constructed separately or subsequently structurally separated, there could only be, however big the place, one rateable value in London for the complete hereditament. Therefore, unless that case was specially met in later legislation, great difficulties would arise.

The author had rather suggested that there should be an end of municipal building. He (the speaker) thought that local authorities hesitated rather to embark on house building, and for many years the statute provided that they should sell within ten years after building. But he thought that so long as private enterprise did not provide the necessary accommodation, the local authority must continue to provide it.

He was very much tempted to make an observation about Mr. Harold Griffin's contribution to the discussion. He could only suggest that some of Mr. Griffin's remarks, and some of Mr. Evans' also, as regards the provisions made and the methods of management and the classes of tenants who occupied those houses, were made out of a superabundance of ignorance, and really and truly their remarks had no relation to the facts. He spoke as one having first-hand knowledge of probably the biggest of the municipal efforts made in the kingdom.

Mr. N. F. WOODROFFE, O.B.E. (Professional Associate), said that owners of property, when they heard that the Rent Restriction Acts were to be considered by a Departmental Committee last year, hoped that they might get a certain amount of relief. If what was forecast in the Report came about, owners would obtain a certain amount of relief, though he thought there would be great disappointment felt over the question of alternative accommodation. Throughout the Report the question of alternative accommodation was dealt with over and over again with such provisos as follows: "If it is assured that the interests of "the tenant are secured." There was no suggestion whatever about the interests of the landlord being secured.

Ever since the War building schemes had been continuously held up owing to obstinate tenants. He had written a letter to the Times upon the subject on the 13th January, 1932, suggesting that there should be some definite scheme of compensation for tenants provided an owner could prove that he was going to embark upon a building scheme. Last year he tried to build a factory in Clerkenwell. He had possession of the whole of the site with the exception of half a house. It was necessary to set back the houses a little way, and half the house came on the site. The house was occupied by a man who was a messenger in the Bank of England. He saw this man and offered him a nice house at Dagenham. The man protested that it would cost him 2*s*. a day to get there and back ; moreover, he would never be able to get home to lunch. In the end he (the speaker) managed to buy him a house at Highbury. The sum of £100 was deposited on his behalf, and a building society mortgage was arranged for him.

In a place in the Waterloo Road it was necessary to get about ten different houses vacant in order to extend an existing factory. The amount generally worked out at about £10 a room. In that case the tenants went out and left lodgers behind, which created an interesting legal position.

He was surprised to hear that no one in the discussion had talked at all about the question of compensation. If the tenants were paid sufficiently they were always ready to go. It was purely and simply a question of bargaining. One could always get them out by giving them enough cash.

It was not a question of accommodation. They would find the accommodation if those who dispossessed them found the money. Throughout the Report the phrase "alternative accommodation" recurred, but at the same time it was admitted that it was utterly impossible for tenants to find such accommodation because they could never be given the same security of tenure. That was certainly true. The man who was going to take one's dispossessed tenant was not going to furnish security of tenure if he had a decontrolled house. He hoped that when building started again, and people had a little money to expand their businesses, something would be done to enable such people to get their own property if they wanted it.

The vote of thanks was carried by acclamation.

Mr. Eason, in reply, said that the hour was late, and he would not attempt to reply at the moment to the many points raised, but he wanted to bring home to the members just one thing—that he was not in any sense criticising the Report of the Committee, which he thought was a good Report. He wished to plead, as he had always pleaded, for more education of the public as a whole. He pictured the state of affairs from his own experience in a house which had been let at 28*s*. a week, which was the restricted rent plus 40 per cent. From that house the tenant had left, leaving two empty rooms on the ground floor. On the top floor there were two occupants who were complying with the requirements of the local bye-laws. In the first floor front room there was a man and his wife and seven children. Eight years ago they had settled down there as a childless married couple, and they had lived in that room ever since. In the back room there was a widow and her grown-up son. One was left with the empty ground-floor rooms and a basement room which the man and his wife and the seven children used as their feeding room. What had been done was to say to that widow and her son that they must go down to the ground floor, where they would have two rooms instead of one, and they would be only charged so much rent for the two. Then one had to say to the couple who had the seven children that they must take the empty back room in addition to what they at present occupied. The net result was that instead of getting 28*s*. a week for the house, one got only 24*s*., but the landlord, who was an enlightened man, did not mind that, because he had reduced the disgraceful overcrowding of those premises. The rent which he could obtain had been reduced, but the result was that an altogether better condition of things prevailed. What he was pleading was that by tactful enforcement of bye-laws the local authorities should educate the public—landlords, tenants, and sub-tenants—so that a better attitude of mind might be produced with regard to the whole question of sub-letting, hygiene, and overcrowding.

In conclusion he wished to thank the meeting most sincerely for the kind way in which his Paper had been received.

The following are Mr. EASON'S replies to the points raised in the discussion:—

Mr. Sherwin comments on my words that the aim of the Acts was the " securing of homes for tenants." This is a correct statement and one of the reasons for the Rent Restriction Acts. I think also his comments on what I have said about paragraph 18 are rather in the nature of a distinction without real difference. The fact remains that, with those suggestions adopted, the Class C tenant will still be able to hold up the Class A owner, and the point is not clear whether Class C sub-tenants are to be in a different category from Class C tenants. I agree that nothing appears in the Report to suggest that a reversal of Nicholson v. Jackson should be made retrospective ; but unless that is the trouble, I see no difficulty in altering the decision.

Mr. Harold Griffin frankly sets out the landlord's point of view and therefore disarms criticism. At the same time the tenant's point of view is so frequently argued and so much more attractive politically that his speech was full of interest and contains a large element of justice.

Lord Marley has justified my preliminary remarks about the Report in the one sentence in his speech where he says that the Report was not the result of compromise but of balance and of team work. May I add that if this was his first experience as a Chairman of such a Committee, his courtesy and assistance to nervous witnesses was such that I hope that he will frequently occupy a similar position again.

Captain Montagu Evans to some extent set out the landlord's point of view. I think he will see that I was comparing owners of real estate with owners of other classes of investment, and that I did not limit my comparison to owners of property coming within the Rent Restriction Acts.

In the statistical paragraph, the statement that overcrowding shows no signs of improving is quite consistent with the later statement that the housing shortage was rapidly being overcome. The one refers to the condition of the poorest class or lowest category, and the other refers to the provision of houses in the two higher categories.

Despite his comments I still think that bye-laws should be enforced. If bye-laws are provided, it must be because the most qualified opinion thinks they are necessary. If they are not to be enforced, then municipal government is a farce.

With regard to the suggestion that Class C houses should not be under control for more than a further five years, Mr. Evans will see that in the earlier part of my Paper I suggested that we must await the result of the working of the five years' plan under the Housing Act, 1930 ; after which possibly public opinion may come round to Mr. Evans' view.

Anything which Mr. Frank Hunt writes or says should receive, and certainly needs, close attention. I think that the best justification of my statement that the enormous housing effort has produced no benefit to the poorest classes is best shown by the conclusions arrived at in this Report as a result of which, if adopted, some 4½ millions of houses are for the present to remain under control.

Mr. Hunt's second point is fair comment, and it is no doubt true that a great number of the poorest class do not move into better conditions because they are not able to pay for the better conditions. I think the difference between Mr. Hunt and myself on this particular point would probably turn out to be that his standard of what is the minimum sanitary requirement for the poorest class would be too high.

I cannot agree with Mr. Hunt's suggestion that private enterprise had never provided new proper accommodation according to the standards of the time for the poorest part of the population. I assume, of course, that he is not referring to workhouse population. I think almost any of the recent insanitary area schemes, or schemes like the Old Nicholas Street area in Shoreditch, would serve to show that he was generalising too much. Apart from London; Leicester, Leeds and Liverpool, to mention only one or two provincial cities, could show him examples of that form of private enterprise still existing to-day.

The large question which Mr. Hunt reserved to the end of his speech deserves and requires very serious thought, and needs greater space than can be given to it here. It is not included in the Report, though doubtless the Committee considered the circumstances.

I am indebted to the last speaker, Mr. Woodroffe, because he was the only one who referred to my suggestion that in certain cases compensation fairly assessed was a proper measure to secure a tenant's removal, and he approved of it. This, however, is not one of the things which is included in this Report, and must therefore be referred for future consideration.

Paper 541.

THE EFFECT OF RECENT LEGISLATION ON RESTRICTIVE COVENANTS AND THEIR ENFORCEMENT.

By W. T. Creswell (Associate).

To be read at the Ordinary General Meeting of The Chartered Surveyors' Institution on Monday, 9th May, 1932.

The law relating to restrictive covenants has greatly increased in importance during the last few years due to particular legislation, and to the higher standard and the increased cost of living, and to the added burdens of taxation.

The mansion-house " has become a luxury which even many of the so-called rich cannot afford. Large houses for the same reason are often not saleable or lettable as private houses ; and many are converted into guest houses, schools, or hostels, or charitable or philanthropic institutions when restrictive covenants do not prohibit. Hence there is a great claim that the restrictions which were formerly tolerated, but have now become oppressive, shall be removed, in order that any building may be used for other purposes than those originally intended and so become saleable or lettable.

The law relating to the sale of land and to leases of property was considerably modified by the legislation which brought in the new law of property, and more particularly by the Law of Property Act, 1925 ; though it must be remembered that the basis of the law is necessarily still the common law of the land as exemplified by the decided cases.

The Act of 1925 does not change the pre-existing law as to liability in respect to restrictive covenants. But it should be noted that under Sections 10-14 of the Land Charges Act, 1925, a restrictive covenant (other than between lessor and lessee), if created after 1925, is void in respect to one who purchased land for value, even if he has notice of it, unless it is registered as a land charge at the office of the Land Registry or in the local deeds registry.

What is a Covenant?

A covenant is a promise or agreement made under seal ; and a promise made under seal is binding, even if there is no consideration involved in the agreement. The parties to the covenant, or some one of them, are or is bound under it to do, or not to do, a specified thing, e.g., to pay rent or not to carry on certain trades in or on the premises. And, in general, in construing a covenant the phraseology is interpreted more in favour of the covenantee than that of the covenantor, having regard of course to the intention of the parties ; this is gathered by considering the whole of the text and context of the document in which the covenant or covenants appear.

Restrictive Covenants.

Some covenants are positive covenants, such as a lessee's covenant to do repairs ; others are negative covenants, such as a lessee's covenant not to assign or sub-let the premises.

The burden and benefit of a covenant concerning land "run with the land" (in equity) as between lessor and lessee. As between those who are otherwise interested in land, the benefit, but not the burden, of the covenant may run with the land at law ; though in the latter case, if the covenant is a negative covenant, the burden also may run with the land.

When a positive covenant is contained in a lease and the covenant relates to something already in existence, it has been the rule that an assignee of the lease was bound by it. If it related to something not already in existence, an assignee was not bound by it unless the term "assigns" was expressly put in the covenant. Now, under Section 79 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, a positive covenant would appear to be binding on the assignee of a lease whether "assigns" are mentioned or not, and although the subject-matter may not be in existence when the covenant is made.

The benefits of negative covenants which restrict the use of land rank as equitable interests and are binding in equity. They are similar to those which obtain to a negative easement. A purchaser for value is, however, affected by them only if it can be shown that at the time of the purchase he had actual or constructive notice of their existence. So if freehold land is purchased, subject to a covenant restricting its use for certain purposes, the purchaser is bound by the restrictive covenant if he knew of its existence, or if he failed when purchasing to make such proper and reasonable investigation as would have revealed the existence of the covenant. In the case of a lease, an assignee of the lease is invariably bound by any negative covenant included in the head lease.

Relief under Statutes.

Housing and Town Planning Acts.

Legislation first commenced to interfere with restrictive covenants by Section 27 of the Housing and Town Planning Act, 1919, and that interference was continued by re-enactment in Section 102 of the Housing Act, 1925. Under this last section relief is given against the enforcement of restrictive covenants in respect to (a) covenants in leases, and (b) the conversion of a single house into two or more tenements. The section is not confined to houses which, if converted into tenements, could readily be let for occupation by persons of the working classes, but it is of general application, and applies where the house, if converted, could be let for occupation by persons of any class. (See Johnston v. Machonachie (1921), 1 K.B., 239.)

Under the provisions of this Act the County Court, on application, has the power to vary the terms of a lease if it is proved that " owing to changes in the character of the " neighbourhood in which the house is situate the house " cannot readily be let as a single tenement, but could " readily be let for occupation if converted into two or " more tenements."

Town Planning.

In passing, it may be stated that the Town Planning Act of 1925 imposes restrictions upon whole areas similar in all respects to those imposed by restrictive covenants on land and buildings ; for, under Section 1 of the Act, the town planning authority has power to propose or adopt, in their town planning scheme, not only land " in the course of " development or likely to be used for building purposes," but also to include land already built upon or not likely to be used for building purposes if " so situate with respect " to any land likely to be used for building purposes that " the general object of the scheme would be better secured " by its inclusion," and, under Section 7 of the Act, the authority may remove, pull down, or alter any building, or alter work (in the area included in the scheme) if it is such as to contravene the scheme, or in the erection or carrying out of which any provision of the scheme has not been complied with.

Section 4 of the Act provides that the Minister of Health may make an order authorising the development of estates, and that building operations shall be proceeded with pending the preparation, adoption or making and approval of a local town planning scheme ; and any such order is registerable under Part III. of the Local Land Charges Rules, 1925. It is true that once the order is made, the person injuriously affected by the scheme is entitled to compensation in respect of the buildings erected under such an order, if they subsequently are demolished under the scheme. But if no order has been given, then compensation is not obtainable in respect to work begun after the resolution of the authority to prepare or adopt a scheme, except, in respect to any contract of which it can be shown that it was entered into before the resolution was passed.

Now, although the resolution referred to does not impose any incumbrance or restrictions on the land, it will be seen it has the effect of sterilising it. Moreover, it prevents unreasonable claims being made by persons who have bought up land subject to the scheme, with the hope of profiting by compensation in due course. (See In re Forsey and Hollebone's Contract (1927), 2 Ch., 379.)

Rent Restriction Acts.

By Section 5 (a) of the Act of 1920 if any obligation of the tenancy is broken it is one of the grounds for recovering possession of a dwelling-house. But a tenant holding over by virtue of the Act is not failing to perform an obligation of the tenancy by reason of his lease containing the usual express condition for possession by the landlord on termination of the lease. (See Artisans, Labourers and General Dwellings Co., Ltd., v. Whitaker (1919), 2 K.B., 301.)

If, however, the lease contains a proviso for re-entry and notice has been given as required by Section 146 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, the Court has a discretion as to giving possession, and will not necessarily grant possession when there is a right of entry on non-payment of rent. (See Reeks v. Shelley (1920), 36 T. L. R., 868.)

A statutory tenancy is not assignable voluntarily, except in the case of a tenant who by apportionment obtains a reduction of his contractual rent as being in excess of those permitted by the Act; and there is not then a statutory tenancy. (See Keeves v. Dean (1924), 1 K.B., 685 ; and Fumasoli v. Comyn and Fish (1924), 132 L. T. R., 490.)

In Dick v. Jacques, 36 T. L. R., 773, it was decided that a sub-lease of part of a dwelling-house is not a breach of covenant against sub-letting the whole of the premises.

When a lessee is under a covenant not to permit premises to be used except as a private dwelling-house, and he takes a similar covenant from his sub-lessee, and the sub-lessee in breach of that covenant sub-lets the dwelling-house floor by floor as weekly tenements, and the lessee thereupon enforces the forfeiture clauses contained in the lease against the sub-lessee, and does not proceed against the weekly tenants (because he is advised the Acts would afford them a defence), then this is not a breach of covenant by the lessee. (See Berton and Others v. Alliance Economic Investment Co. (1922), 1 K.B., 742.) Furthermore, a sub-lessee is protected by the Acts though the lease is forfeited by the sub-lessor's breach of a covenant in the head lease. (See Ward v. Larkins (1923), W.N., 189.)

Agricultural Holdings.

By Section 30 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923, notwithstanding any contract of tenancy or covenants as to cropping, a tenant has not only freedom therefrom, but liberty also to dispose of the produce.

It has been doubted, however, whether the provisions of this section, as to the disposal of produce, can affect any covenant relating to the disposal of manure produced on the holding. Therefore a covenant restricting the disposal of manure, otherwise than upon the holding, would appear to be binding on the covenantor. Any breach of a contract or covenant is reviewable by arbitration under Section 16 of the Act, as also is any question of deterioration of a holding apart from covenant.

The Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923, lays down certain rules of good husbandry to be performed by the tenant ; and by Section 29 of the Act the measure of liability in respect to these not being performed by him is the value of the damage done. In general, a tenant can now farm as he pleases as long as he does not injure or deteriorate the holding. These powers of the tenant can be restricted, however, by agreement as to the last year of the tenancy, and, in fact, they are usually so restricted.

By Section 31, if the letting agreement is silent, the tenant may not sell off hay, straw, roots or manure in the last year, unless he first offers them to the landlord or incoming tenant.

The tenant is given extensive powers as to removing fixtures subject to the landlord's option to purchase.

Small Holdings and Allotments.

Under Section 6 of the Small Holdings and Allotments Act, 1926, a small holding sold by a county council must for a term of forty years from the date of the sale, and in certain circumstances thereafter, be held subject to certain conditions. Amongst other things the holding is not to be divided, sold, assigned, let or sub-let without the consent of the county council. It is to be cultivated in accordance with the rules of good husbandry, and only to be used for agriculture. Not more than one dwelling-house is to be erected on the holding unless it is proved further accommodation is required, and the dwelling-house is to comply with conditions for securing healthiness and freedom from overcrowding. Further, it is to be kept in repair and insured against fire by the owner ; and no one dwelling-house is to be used for the sale of intoxicating liquors.

These conditions may, however, be relaxed or dispensed with, the Minister first giving his consent thereto.

Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927.

On the grant of a new lease under Section 6 of the Act it must conform, as far as possible, to the terms of the old. Covenants honouring an undertaking of the landlord to a tenant not to allow certain things to be done by other tenants holding under him, may be inserted in the new lease if they appeared in the old.

By Section 14 of the Act the landlord has power to sell or grant leases notwithstanding any statutory or other restrictions.

Section 18 of the Act places a limitation on damages for breach of covenants to repair. A right of re-entry or forfeiture for a breach of any such covenant or agreement is not enforceable by action, or otherwise, until it is proved that a notice has been served on the lessee, as required under Section 146 of the Law of Property Act, 1925.

Under Section 19 of the Act, covenants in leases inserted to guard against the tenant making improvements, are deemed to be subject to a proviso that the licence of the landlord is not to be reasonably withheld. Furthermore, a covenant against the alteration of the user of the demised premises shall, if the alteration of user does not involve any structural alterations, be subject to a proviso against the payment of a fine.

The Law of Property Act, 1925.

It is to the Law of Property Act, 1925, we must look for the most revolutionary changes in the law relating to covenants. The Act came into operation on 1st January, 1926. It confers on certain officials wider powers for the granting of relief from covenants, than the Courts had exercised at any previous time.

Section 84 of the Act provides for the possible modification or discharge of restrictive covenants, and is perhaps of greatest interest to the surveyor. Power is given to " the " authority " (viz., one of the official arbitrators appointed under the Acquisition of Land (Assessment of Compensation) Act, 1919) to discharge restrictions wholly, or partially, or to modify them, subject or not to the payment of compensation on any one of three grounds:—

(a) That by reason of changes in the character of the property or the neighbourhood, or other material circumstances, the restrictions ought to be deemed obsolete, or that its continued existence, or its existence without modification, would impede the reasonable user of the land for public or private purposes, without securing practical benefits to other persons ; or

(b) That the persons of full age, and capacity, entitled to the benefit of the restriction have agreed, either expressly or impliedly, to the same being discharged or modified ; or

(c) That the proposed discharge or modification will not injure the persons entitled to the benefit of the restriction.

These grounds apply to restrictions whether subsisting before 1st January, 1926, or imposed thereafter, but not where the restriction was imposed on the land being given gratuitously or for a nominal consideration for public purposes. The powers above referred to apply primarily to restrictions affecting freeholds, but they also apply to restrictions in leases where the original term exceeded 70 years and 50 years of the lease have expired ; mining leases being excluded therefrom.

As regards (a), what is meant by change in the character of the neighbourhood is perhaps not difficult to determine from a mere observation of the district ; but as to what is meant by change in the character of the property is not clear. It may be that it refers to, or at least includes, the whole of the property on an estate ; and that it is not confined to one building only, as, for example, where an estate is affected by a landslip, or by erosions of the sea, and cannot therefore be used for the purposes for which it was originally intended.

The words " or other circumstances of the case " must surely refer to change in the taste and habits of the community ; so that flats, which before 1926 would have been looked upon with horror in many places far removed from Park Lane, are now tolerated in Park Lane itself.

The juncture at which a restriction can be deemed to be obsolete is difficult to determine. In a residential neighbourhood some must derive some practical benefit from, let us say, a covenant against others carrying on any or certain named businesses. Furthermore, removal of the restriction may affect the value of the property, which fact cannot be ignored, and must be treated as a matter for compensation, though not as a ground for refusing relief.

As to (b), there may be active acquiescence in this, as in Sayers v. Collyer (1884), 28 C.D., 103 ; and there may be acquiescence inferred from omission to enforce the restriction as to other property bound by the covenant. The principle laid down in Osborne v. Bradley (1903), 2 Ch., 446—viz., that alteration in the character of the neighbourhood is no defence to an action on a covenant restricting user unless it is proved, by the existence of a building scheme or otherwise, that the covenant was entered into with the object either of securing the common advantage of a number of purchasers, or of protecting other property of the covanantee, and that the covanantee has, by his own acts or acquiescence made it impossible to obtain that object—seems to be the proper principle to be applied.

Delay in taking steps to enforce a restriction would appear to come within this ground and to have the effect of an agreement by implication. (See Gaskin v. Balls (1879), 13 C.D., 324.)

As to (c), it is not necessary for a covenantor to prove damage, though proof appears to have been required in Stevens v. Willing & Co. (1929), W.N., 53, when the plaintiff was acting under " a moral obligation."

However, relief may be gained against restrictive covenants recently made, or merely imposed at the caprice of the vendor in order to enable him to charge a fine for a licence.

Three alternative courses are open to the eminent surveyors who are appointed to act as " the authority " under the Act. These alternatives are—

(1) to dismiss the application ;

(2) to grant it as asked for, or in a modified form, and without compensation ;

(3) to grant the application as asked for, or in a modified form, subject to compensation to specified parties.

An order by the authority binds all parties whether their identity is ascertained or not, or whether they are parties to the proceedings or not.

Where proceedings are taken by action or otherwise, a stay of proceedings can be applied for by the defendant, though it will not be allowed in the case where a landlord is enforcing a proviso for re-entry in a lease by reason of the breach of a restrictive covenant. (See Iveagh v. Harris (1929), 2 Ch., 142.)

There is a right of appeal from any order made by the authority under this section (84), and this is made by an originating motion to the Chancery Division of the High Court.

It will be seen that values of property are, and must be, materially affected by this section.

Repairs.

Section 146 of the Act is in the main a re-enactment of Section 14 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881 ; and is to the effect that a lessor cannot enforce a right of re-entry or forfeiture for breach of a covenant without first he gives notice to the lessee requiring him to remedy the breach and to make compensation ; and in such a case, the Court can, if it sees fit, grant relief to the lessee.

The provisions of the section are applicable to a covenant or conditions against assigning, underletting, parting with the possession or disposing of the land leased when the breach of covenant occurs after 1st January, 1926. Any breaches committed before that date are outside the Act, as are also breaches of covenant to pay rent, breaches of certain covenants in mining leases, and conditions for forfeiture in certain instances of a lease on the bankruptcy of the lessee.

A usual practice prior to the Act coming into force was for notices to be served by the lessor during the term upon the lessee, especially in respect to leases of 99 years, the notices requiring them to execute various repairs of a structural and decorative character ; and there is no doubt they were regarded as of great hardship by the tenants and oppressive, especially where there was no possible risk of injury to the lessor's reversion.

This hardship was more particularly felt in the case of an interim schedule being served as to purely decorative repairs to the interior of the premises as distinct from repairs to maintain the structure.

Section 147 appears to have met this difficulty, for it provides that when a notice is served on a lessee, either before or after the commencement of the Act, in respect of internal decorative repairs to a house or other building, he may apply to the Court for relief. If the Court, after considering all the circumstances, particularly the length of the lessee's unexpired term, is satisfied that the notice is unreasonable, it may wholly or partially relieve the lessee from liability for such repairs ; but the section does not apply—

(a) when the liability arises under an express covenant or agreement to put the property in a decorative state of repair and the covenant or agreement has never been performed ;

(b) to any matter necessary or proper (1) for putting or keeping the property in a sanitary condition, or (2) for the maintenance or preservation of the structure ;

(c) to any statutory liability as, for instance, that under Section 1 of the Housing Act, 1925, which imposes on the landlord the necessity to keep a house in all respects reasonably fit for human habitation ;

(d) to any covenant or stipulation to yield up the house or other building in a specified state of repair at the end of the term.

In Cannon Brewery Co., Ltd., v. Signal Press, Ltd., and Others (1928), 44 T. L. R., 486, it was held that a notice of a breach of covenant is properly served on the tenant if it is left with some person on the premises ; and if there are reasonable grounds for supposing that that person will, if possible, pass it on to the tenant.

A DISCUSSION took place on Mr. W. T. CRESWELL'S Paper entitled

THE EFFECT OF RECENT LEGISLATION ON RESTRICTIVE COVENANTS AND THEIR ENFORCEMENT.

Mr. H. ARTHUR STEWARD (Hon. Secretary) said it was with the greatest pleasure that he rose to propose a vote of thanks to Captain Creswell for the Paper he had given that evening, and he was sure they were all grateful to Captain Creswell for having prepared so much tiresome matter in such an interesting and concise form.

He said " tiresome " because recent legislation, whether from Conservative, Liberal or Socialist Governments was principally of a harassing nature, aimed primarily at the landlord.

There were good and bad landlords, but it seemed unfortunate that the good landlord—and there were many—should be legislated against in order to control the bad landlord.

There were landlords that he knew, and very many more no doubt that the members knew, who treated their lessees and tenants with every sympathy, but one often heard landlords as a class talked about as if they were the enemies of civilisation.

He wondered, if land were nationalised, how much sympathy tenants would get from the State as landlord.

Captain Creswell's Paper had dealt in the main with legal questions on which it was difficult for a surveyor to express views, even though most surveyors were often asked by the legal profession, as represented by the solicitors, for their opinion not only on surveying matters but on the interpretation of Acts of Parliament as well.

Legislation on restrictive covenants was a euphemism for interference with existing contracts—a dangerous procedure.

Take the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927. A tenant agreed with his landlord to take a lease of business premises for a certain period, and possibly paid a premium calculated on the length of his lease, knowing that at the end of his term his interest in the property would cease. Then came an Act of Parliament which said in spite of that he was to be entitled to another lease at the end of the term of the first lease. That was then so watered down that it was of little value, but the principle was the same. What would be thought of an Act of Parliament which said that one was to be entitled to the continuation of a terminable annuity, or part of it, after the annuity had expired.

A lessee covenanted in his lease to keep and leave the premises in repair. The Landlord and Tenant Act was passed, and Section 18 said that in spite of that covenant the landlord could only claim damages for a breach to the amount by which his reversion was diminished by the breach. That sounded quite reasonable until one came to examine it from the landlord's point of view. For example, a landlord had leases of property outstanding against him for, say, forty years ; what was the value of his reversion at that distant date? Practically nothing. Supposing one or two lessees of a block of property allowed the houses to get into decorative disrepair, thereby generally lowering the tone of the neighbourhood and encouraging others to do the same? One probably drew their attention to the repairing covenants in their leases and expressed a pious hope that they would do something about it ; but if they took no notice what remedy was there? It was waste of time and money to go to the Courts.

If one proved one's case, which if it was a question of decorative repair was difficult, the lessee would probably be given time in which to do the work.

That generally meant one had to go back to the Court again. One eventually won the case with costs and found the lessee had no money. Landlords wanted protection against lessees quite as much as lessees against landlords.

Section 18 of the Landlord and Tenant Act and

Section 147 of the Law of Property Act appeared to a large extent to have got rid of the speculator who acquired freehold ground rents and then served extravagant schedules of dilapidations on the lessees, and followed those up with offers of sale of the freehold at a price showing a quite unreasonable profit on the price paid by him.

If the elimination of that class of speculator had been achieved by the Acts it was a good thing. But there could be little doubt that on the whole they had added considerably to the difficulties of management.

Then there was the case of the lease which forbade assignment without consent. Section 19 of the Landlord and Tenant Act did away with the landlord's control of that class of lessee. The result was that the landlord ran the risk, against which he had been careful to protect himself, of having the lease of his property assigned to a man of straw.

Little use had been made in London of the powers given under the Housing and Town Planning Acts for the variation of restrictive covenants as to the user of houses by applying to the county court.

That was because both freeholder and leaseholder alike realised that if any variation of a restrictive covenant as to user was necessary on account of a permanent change in a neighbourhood, it was in the interest of good estate management to recognise the fact and provide accordingly.

One of the difficulties in that connection was that individual lessees who had a difficulty in dealing with their property would suggest that a change in the character of a neighbourhood had taken place, when all that had happened was a temporary falling off in the demand for a particular type of dwelling-house, due, perhaps, to general financial depression not exclusive to any particular locality. In such cases it was unwise, as well as unfair to other lessees, to allow any variation in the covenants as to user.

Sometimes a lessee having taken the lease of a house for use as a single private residence, and at a rent based on such user, found that he could sell his lease for more money if he could use the house for, say, letting furnished apartments, and he considered it a hardship if he was not allowed to do so. The landlord was expected to agree and thus put money into his lessee's pocket, but he was prohibited under the Landlord and Tenant Act from charging an increased rent in consequence of that more remunerative form of user, and which was contrary to his scheme of private residential user of the block of property.

The landlord, moreover, if he agreed, was committing a gross breach of faith with his other lessees who had taken their houses for private occupation.

There were, of course, great numbers of cases where restrictive covenants as to user had been varied by licenses in favour of a class of user very different from that allowed under the lease when originally granted because of a change in character of the neighbourhood.

One of the advantages of holding a lease of a house on a large well-managed estate was that any great change in the character of a neighbourhood was less likely to occur, and where changes did take place they were more able to be controlled and confined to particular streets and areas.

In his opinion changes in character had all too frequently been brought about by the neglect of freeholders for one reason or another to enforce the restrictive covenants in their leases.

He had spoken entirely from the point of view of landlords of large estates where as a rule there was control and management by an agent, surveyor and solicitor, and where the owners were not out for every penny, but were more concerned in the general good management of the estate ; but he recognised that there was the other class of landlord, and also that there were always two sides to most cases. Lessees and tenants had their side to the question, and probably more would be heard later from some member of arguments in their favour.

In conclusion he desired again to thank Captain Creswell for his Paper, and to propose that a most hearty vote of thanks be accorded to him.

Mr. Lydall Savill (Chartered Surveyor), in seconding the vote of thanks, said the Paper appeared to him as a most attractive skeleton, delicately adorned with meat at the head and tail, it being left to the proposer and seconder to flesh up the middle cuts for the delectation of the meeting. The proposer, however, as was the way of proposers, had collared all the best bits, and, if he might say so, had made admirable use of his material.

Captain Creswell had chosen a vast subject, and must have had considerable difficulty in compressing his material into the space at his disposal. He had, therefore, wisely contented himself with making some general remarks at the beginning, and at the tail had concentrated on what he (Mr. Savill) assumed to be his favourite Act—the Law of Property Act, 1925.

The legislation referred to by Captain Creswell was no doubt necessary, but, as Mr. Steward had justly remarked, the good landlords, who were in the majority, had had to suffer for the few bad ones. There was no doubt that legislation had done something to cure the faults of the bad landlords. But part at least of that same legislation had created faulty situations, which were as bad if not worse than those which it had set out to rectify.

Of this the Rent Restrictions Acts, which restricted a landlord from gaining possession of his own property, were a notable example. No doubt the profiteering landlord had to be checked, but there were surely other ways of achieving that than by stultifying the whole question of rehousing the people.

The author had touched on the Rent Restriction Act, and there was perhaps one additional point that was of interest. The Act, in restricting the profiteering landlord, had created the profiteering tenant. There had been one or two cases lately which had given the landlord at least some hope of dealing in some way with the difficulty.

The author had set out to deal with the Law of Property Act, 1925, more fully than the others, especially as it applied to restrictive covenants, and he had made the meaning of that part of the Act very clear. He had also supplied useful comments and references. But the Landlord and Tenant Act of 1927 supplemented the Law of Property Act quite considerably. Captain Creswell had tabulated those Acts, but it might be possible to effect a small comparison here and there.

For instance, the Law of Property Act, 1925, provided for relief from the landlord's claim for forfeiture or re-entry on breaches of covenant restricting from sub-letting, assigning, &c., " without licence or consent " (Section 146). The Landlord and Tenant Act carried the matter a step further in Section 19 by providing that covenants containing those words, " from sub-letting without licence or consent," should also be deemed to contain the words " such con- " sent is not to be unreasonably withheld." That, however, did not appear to apply to leases containing an absolute restriction against assigning or sub-letting, as distinguished from those covenants which contained the words " without licence or consent."

Covenants restricting user were covered by Section 84 of the Law of Property Act, and that section was drawn principally to apply to restrictions on freehold land, and those restrictions were not altered in any way by the 1927 Act. Section 84, however, also dealt with leasehold property where the lease was granted for an original term of more than seventy years of which more than fifty had expired. There the Landlord and Tenant Act affected the matter again. Under Section 19 (3) of the Landlord and Tenant Act the landlord was restricted from charging any fine in respect of a licence unless the change of user also involved structural alteration of the building. It was quite clear that so long as the lease contained a covenant restricting user, the landlord still might have the power of insisting absolutely on the letter of that covenant. He could still restrict user absolutely. Though the author did not say so, he supposed a claim for forfeiture on breach of a covenant restricting user would come within the limits of Section 146 of the Law of Property Act. If that was so, a rather peculiar situation arose, because where a lessee had committed a breach of that covenant and the landlord had applied for forfeiture or re-entry under Section 146, the tenant would have power to apply for relief from that claim. But if one looked at the matter in the light of the Landlord and Tenant Act of 1927, the landlord had absolute right to exercise the strength of the covenant to restrict the user—which was a little anomalous.

He was not quite sure whether the same thing would not apply to the restriction against assigning and sub-letting where the covenant did not contain the words " without " consent or licence."

There were other complications in that matter of user. Most members had had cases where a request for a licence for user had been wrapped up in the form of a notice to effect improvement.

He had had a lot to say on the question of repairs and dilapidations, but as Mr. Steward had said it so much better than he could have done he would leave that part of the subject.

It was a great pleasure to him to second the vote of thanks to Captain Creswell for such an interesting Paper on a subject which was of absorbing interest to all surveyors at the present time.

Mr. A. CECIL CAPORN, M.P. (Visitor), remarked that he had had great pleasure in accepting the kind invitation of The Institution to be present in the hope that he should learn the views of its members in relation to a class of legislation which, he ventured to think, should be of absorbing interest to the community at the present time, especially having regard to the fact that a considerable portion of it was in due course coming up for amendment before the present Parliament.

The value of restrictive covenants undoubtedly had been considerable in the past both to private owners, to neighbouring owners, and to the community at large, and he thought those present could all call to recollection estates which had been town planned on most excellent lines by means of restrictive covenants long before any town-planning legislation had been introduced into this country at all.

He should doubt whether any of the members of The Institution would take the view that a power to interfere and relieve from restrictive covenants in proper cases was an undesirable power ; but when one came to some of the other legislation, no doubt very divergent views arose in any community or in any section of professional men.

He desired to refer shortly to the Town Planning Act. Under that Act a class of legislation had been started differing from the legislation of the past, in that it placed the power of deciding whether restrictions upon land should or should not be imposed solely at the whim of a Minister of State. It was well known that once such powers were put into the hands of a Minister they were in fact put into the hands of a civil servant. Personally he should be the last person to run down in any way our civil servants ; undoubtedly they were a most excellent body of gentlemen, who gave of their best, and who gave very efficient service to the State ; but he would submit that they were not a suitable tribunal to decide whether or not restrictions should be put upon the users of land—restrictions which were in the main detrimental to the private owner. Under the existing Town Planning Act one got restrictions on land, not by restrictive covenants (the poor landlord was not consulted at all), but by means of legislation imposed at the whim of a Minister of State. It was true that in law the scheme had no effect until it was finally approved ; but once it was finally approved, the scheme related back to the date when the resolution had been first introduced and passed by the local authority. The effect in fact, though not in law, was that the land was sterilised, and might be sterilised for years, without any compensation becoming payable to the owner. In many cases no compensation became payable even when the scheme was finally passed and approved, because when the Minister came finally to approve it he considered that the claims for compensation would be so heavy that he cut out the restrictions, and the result was that the land which had been under restrictions in fact for years was relieved from them, and no compensation became payable.

His attention had been drawn in the course of the last month to a case in which land had been restricted, in fact since 1911, as a result of a resolution passed at that date, and only six months ago the local authority had decided to proceed with a new scheme altogether, and they had written to the private owner saying he was at liberty to make any use he liked of his land. From 1911 until six months ago the owner had been unable, without running risks—(because throughout the whole period if he had liked to take the risk he could have used it as he liked)—to do anything to put that land to commercial use, and he could not claim, and would never be able to claim, a penny-piece of compensation for the restrictions placed upon his land from 1911 up to six months ago. Personally he expressed the view that that was wrong, and he hoped that in the new Town Planning Act some provision would be made whereby if an interim development order were refused and an owner could establish before an independent tribunal that he had in fact suffered loss as a result of the refusal of an interim development order, that owner would be able to claim his compensation then and there.

Unfortunately he was not a member of the Committee dealing with that Bill, but he understood that when an amendment to that effect had been introduced in the Committee, and nearly passed, the Attorney-General had appeared in haste and had endeavoured to explain, and had apparently convinced the majority of the Committee that the amendment would wreck the whole town-planning scheme. He gathered the Attorney-General's argument was that "If you pay compensation now, and then the Minister "decides that those restrictions ought not to be imposed, "the owner has got away with the compensation and will "have his land free and unrestricted." Personally he thought that there ought to be a time when a local authority ought to have to decide definitely whether it was asking for those restrictions in the public interest or not, and that if the local authority decided that it was asking for those restrictions they should have no right to ask for them, even in the public interest, at the expense of a private individual owner.

He should have thought the objection of the Attorney-General could be met by arranging that if the restriction was omitted from the final scheme the owner became liable for betterment, or in some form liable to refund the value again added to the land by reason of the restriction having been withdrawn. He understood the Minister had promised to consider the matter, and personally he should wait and see the amendment before he said it was of a satisfactory nature. That was one aspect of the matter which, he ventured to suggest, the members of The Institution should consider when the Bill came out of Committee in order to see whether it did really provide reasonable and effective means of obtaining compensation when loss was suffered.

The other objection he had was upon the question as to who was to decide whether a scheme proposed was reasonable. Under the present arrangement that was done by most excellent gentlemen ; he would not for a moment suggest that the gentlemen who sat as inspectors at Ministry of Health inquiries were not amply qualified and fit and proper persons to hold those inquiries. He believed they were. His objection to them was that they were not independent tribunals. They sat merely as advisors to a Minister. Nobody knew whether their advice was taken or acted upon, and the poor unfortunate landowner, who, at great expense, called expert witnesses, had no means of ascertaining whether the evidence of his expert witnesses had or had not received any adequate consideration either by the tribunal or, which was much more important, by the Minister who was acting on the advice.

The view he took very strongly was that, with that type of inquiry, the inspector should sit as arbitrator, and that his report should be made public, so that all parties to the arbitration should have an opportunity of seeing and ascertaining for themselves the very elementary principles on which all litigation in this country was run, namely, whether or not the evidence that had been called before the inspector had been considered by him, and the grounds and reasons upon which he had come to certain determinations and findings. His own experience of twenty years of the law was that the average Englishman was a good sportsman ; if he thought he had had a fair trial, even though the trial went against him, he was prepared to accept it and to say "I have had a fair trial ; the Court knows better "than I do ; I suppose I must be wrong." But when he thought he had not had a fair trial then he felt a festering grievance.

The landowner in this country at the present time whose property came under legislation such as the Town Planning Act had a real and genuine grievance in that, though he had the opportunity of attending an inquiry at great cost to himself, he had no opportunity of ascertaining what the conclusions of the inspector holding the inquiry were or of knowing whether in fact the inspector had acted according to the evidence or on the principles of law, which he was supposed to apply.

Mr. ARTHUR H. DAVIS (Chartered Surveyor), supporting the vote of thanks, said that he would like to touch upon the matters which arose under the Law of Property Act, 1925, and the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, so that perhaps his remarks would differ from those which had gone before.

There were two schools of thought as to the form of an ad interim schedule of dilapidations. Some preferred a short note of each defect, without details as to how it should be remedied, while others favoured the more detailed description which fulfilled the part of a specification.

The latter was the method which he himself preferred.

It left no doubt in the mind of the recipient as to what it was intended to describe, and rendered it easier to discuss and adjust when differences as to liability arose. Further, there were many lessees of limited means, and a schedule of dilapidations in specification form enabled them to pass the same on to a builder for estimating purposes.

He proposed, if he might, to quote several legal cases which had a great bearing on the law of dilapidations. In Horsey Estates, Ltd., v. Steiger (1899), 2 Q.B., 79 C.A., the Court of Appeal held that " The notice to repair shall " be such as to give the tenant precise information of " what is alleged against him, and what is demanded from " him." . . . . " The reason is clear. He ought to have " an opportunity of considering whether he can admit " the breach alleged and whether it is capable of remedy." . . . . " In short, the notice is intended to give to the " person whose interest it is sought to forfeit the oppor- " tunity of considering his position before an action is " brought against him."

In Lock v. Pearce (1893), 2 Ch., 271, it was held that " the notice may be good although it does not claim pay- " ment of compensation in money," and again in Pannell v. City of London Brewery Company (1900), 1 Ch., 496, " the notice may be good although it includes matters in " respect of which the tenant is not liable under his repair- " ing covenant."

The most important case of all dealing with the notice of repair and the schedule of dilapidations which it accompanied was the very vexed case of Fox v. Jolly (1916), 1 A.C., 1, which was a House of Lords case. There the schedule served upon the lessee was couched in very general terms. It referred to such things as " roofs," " fronts " and backs," " rooms and staircases generally," without giving any very definite detail, and at the end of the schedule was, what one frequently finds in one form or another, a general omnibus clause " to do all those other things which " may be found necessary whether specifically mentioned " or not." The official referee had held in that case that the notice was insufficient, but the Divisional Court reversed his decision, and was upheld by the Court of Appeal and the House of Lords. It was held that "although the "schedule did not specify the particulars of the breaches "(id est, give full details of all and every defect), it did "specify the particular breach complained of."

There was nothing new in that decision because nineteen years previously, in Fletcher v. Noakes (1897), 1 Ch., 271, the Court had held exactly the same as the House of Lords held in 1916.

If he might deviate, he would refer to a remark made by Mr. Steward, who had referred to exterior painting as a decoration. Personally be thought primarily exterior painting was not a decoration. He thought that was a secondary consideration. He considered it as a structural repair, because it was essential for the maintenance of the wood and metal.

Dealing with the question of the service of notice, there were many cases thereupon. It was interesting to note that there were three different sections which dealt with notice to repair. They were Sections 146 and 196 (3) of the Law of Property Act, 1925, and Section 18 of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927.

There were two interesting cases where a lessor was anxious to prevent a lessee from carrying out certain repairs which he thought were not "improvements" but structural alterations. On that point there was the case of Lilley and Skinner, Ltd., v. Crump (1927), K.B.D., where the plaintiffs occupied premises in Oxford Street and Stratford Place and had leased the adjoining premises and wished to make an opening between the two. The landlord refused permission, and the Court held that it was an alteration which was permitted by the section. A similar case was that of Ball Brothers, Ltd., v. Sinclair (1931), L. R., 2 Ch., 325, where the lessee undertook to let certain premises to an under-lessee and wished to alter the staircase, &c., and the landlord refused consent. The tenant thereupon threatened the landlord that he would proceed whether he wished it or not. The landlord applied to the Court for an injunction, and the judge held that the tenant was within his rights.

He might refer to one or two cases, formerly of great importance, which had now lost much of their force because of Section 18 of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927.

The first was Inderwick v. Leach and Others (1884), 1 T. L. R., 95, where the owner pulled down his premises, but, nevertheless, he was enabled by the Court to recover damage for breaches of the covenant to leave in repair.

There was also Joyner v. Weeks (1891), 2 Q.B.D., 31, where the plaintiff was held entitled to damages for breach of covenant by the defendant, being the cost of putting the premises into repair in accordance with the covenant, despite the fact the plaintiff, who had relet the premises in disrepair to another lessee, was not worse off than if the original lessee had performed his covenant, and that alterations were to be made to the premises which would render the decorations and repairs abortive. The Court held "that the con-"tract between the landlord and a third party could not be "taken into account, and did not in any way affect the "tenant's obligations."

There were two other cases he would mention. One was the well-known case of Anstruther Gough-Calthorpe v. McOscar (1924), 1 K.B., 716 C.A., which concerned property let on a 95 years' lease and was a dispute as to the nature and extent of full-repairing covenants at the termination of the lease owing to detrimental changes in character of the neighbourhood since the granting of the lease. The Court held that the changes notwithstanding, the lessee was bound to leave the property in repair strictly in accordance with the covenant. This case followed the decision of Morgan v. Hardy (1886), 18 Q.B.D., 646.

A propos of that, it seemed to him that that section brought into question the point of betterment, for if one were to assume that that tenement house were in another district, say, in Soho, and it had been converted into valuable shop premises, to-day any "diminution in value "of the reversion" would be far greater as a highly valuable shop premises than it would be if the house had remained in its tenement condition. Therefore the landlord would expect a higher standard of repair.

In Myers v. Hollington (1925) the property of the plaintiff was acquired by the Corporation of the City of London as an insanitary area under the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890. The lease of eighty years expired about the time of the acquisition of the property by the authority. Under Section 21 of the 1890 Act it would be remembered that compensation was payable not only for land but for the buildings, taking into consideration their condition, &c. The plaintiff claimed that the property was not in the state of repair in which it ought to have been, and therefore he did not receive the compensation which he ought to have received from the Corporation. The High Court held that the compulsory acquisition had not overridden the covenant "to deliver "up the property in repair," and therefore the plaintiff was entitled to damages for the breach.

Such an action could not be brought to-day having regard to Section 18 of the Landlord and Tenant Act, and the Housing Act, 1930, Section 12.

Mr. J. LEONARD CROUCH, Barrister-at-Law (Associate), said that all the author's examples, he thought, came down to this—that modern legislation concerning restrictive covenants imposed so many restrictions upon the old common law right that a man might do what he liked with his own provided he caused no injury to other people. He (the speaker) was not at all sure that the modern trend of legislation would not ultimately reduce that common law to this—that a man might do what he liked with his property only if he did good to other people.

That legislation did not only affect restrictive covenants imposed by leases. Legislation imposed restriction upon freeholders. The modern trend was perhaps to render the position of landlords less secure than previously. But that sort of legislation had come to stay, and it was hardly profitable how to discuss questions of whether it was right or wrong. Those Acts were here and had to be administered.

As an example of interference with the common law—an example which had the advantage of being wholly irrelevant to the Paper before them that night, he would refer to the attempt by a madman upon the life of Queen Victoria. It was afterwards explained to Her Majesty that the man was no criminal because he was mad; and on her protesting, it was again explained that under the common law a man who was insane could not commit a crime. The outcome of her protestations was the Act passed in the year 1883 known as the Trial of Lunatics Act. That Act gave a jury the power to return a verdict of "Guilty, but insane." That sounded quite simple ; the man would be locked up during His Majesty's pleasure probably for the rest of his life. But it had had an effect which showed the danger of interfering with the common law. One day a man, whom he who call Mr. A, killed another ; A said to a friend B "I have killed So and So." B then took A on one side and succoured him ; and did other acts which clearly made him an accessory after the fact. A and B were caught and were put on trial. A was convicted by the jury of being guilty but insane ; whereupon B was called to stand his arraignment before the jury, when his counsel rose and said: "You cannot try him. The common law of England is "that an insane man cannot commit a crime, and it is also "common law that until you prove the principal crime to "have been committed there cannot be an accessory. You "cannot be an accessory after a fact which has never "existed, and so you cannot try my client. The first man "was guilty but insane. If he is insane he cannot have "committed that murder." That put the prosecution in a difficulty. And the decision of the Court of Criminal Appeal was that the trial of B could not take place as the principal crime had not been committed. That was an unexpected result of the Act.

What was going to be the result of some of the Acts of Parliament to which the author had referred that evening? Personally he did not know, but he could guess that in one or two cases no very great result would occur at all. Under the Landlord and Tenant Act of 1927, Section 4, at the end of a lease a tenant, if he had any goodwill attaching to the premises, could claim compensation. Under Section 5 if he alleged that that compensation could not satisfy him he could claim a lease. Within his own experience he had never known a case in which that lease had been granted by the Court. The difficulty there was, what evidence could one produce that at the end of, say, two years, when the lease was going to expire, any goodwill would attach to those premises at all? Was it evidence that a saleable goodwill existed? It was no evidence that goodwill attached to premises that in fact there was a goodwill carried on in the premises. Until there was some considerable body of cases from which it was possible to extract some principle, it must be a very difficult thing to prove a case under that section. His own experience was that it had never been proved, and he would like to know what the experience in general was all over the country as to the Court granting those leases. He knew of none personally.

Captain Creswell had produced a Paper which would be a useful catalogue of cases in which leases and landlords were concerned. The list of Acts of Parliament dealing with the subject were as nothing compared with what lawyers had to deal with in other directions. In the last thirty years two thousand Acts of Parliament had been passed, and every year the Statute Book added offences—not in all cases major offences, but in most cases petty and minor offences—at the rate of hundreds, and he questioned whether anyone present went one day without committing an offence for which he might be prosecuted. He was happy to think that in the welter of legislation concerning landlords and tenants not one Act said that the landlord should be considered criminally liable.

Mr. Graham Mould, Barrister-at-Law (Associate), said he should like to congratulate Captain Creswell upon the extremely useful Paper which he had presented. There were one or two points to which he would like to draw attention.

The author had referred to a case on town planning, and he (Mr. Mould) would quote a short extract from the judgment of Lord Hanworth, the Master of the Rolls, dealing with compensation in that case, which he thought was useful:—

> "Section 12 contains a rather remarkable provision. If a scheme has been adopted and put in force and has injuriously affected any particular property, the responsible authority may at any time within one month after the date of an award of compensation give notice to the owner of the property of their intention to modify or withdraw all or any of the provisions of the scheme which gave rise to the claim for compensation. The result is that when the responsible authority find that if the scheme is carried through they may have to pay compensation they may withdraw it in respect of any particular property."

That showed that the landowner was subjected to, as he (Mr. Mould) thought, very unfair treatment in connection with some town planning schemes.

In connection with the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, perhaps Captain Creswell would forgive him if he suggested that the grant of a new lease was made under Section 5 and not under Section 6. That was probably a clerical error which had escaped the author's attention.

Section 18 of that Act was the one which placed a limitation on damages in the event of a breach of a covenant to repair. He was not sure whether he had been able to follow quite all Mr. Steward's observations on that point. Assuming, apart from statutory legislation, that the damages for the breach of a covenant to repair would be, say, £500, prima facie the landlord was entitled to £500 ; but the section went on to provide that if the landlord's reversion was not going to be damaged to the extent of £500, if it was only going to be damaged to the extent of £50, then all that he could recover would be that £50. Personally he was not sure that that was unfair. It seemed to him to have in it all the elements of equity. He would take a case such as all were familiar with some years ago. The landlord let a house on a repairing lease and the end of the lease came. The tenant had covenanted to repair and support, &c. The damages on a bill for dilapidations would be, say, £1,000. The landlord then said " I am going to " pull this house down, but you have got to pay me £1,000 " for breach of the covenant although the work which you " would do under that covenant would not be worth a " thousand pence to me ; in fact it would be a minus " quantity, because it would be more difficult for me to " pull it down after you had done the work and strengthened " the house." It was that sort of case which Section 18 aimed at with regard to the limitation of damages.

Another class of case to which the Section 18 would apply would be a private house which was to be turned into a shop. The section said that in so far as the particular works necessary to remedy the breaches would be useless for the shop, the landlord should not have the benefit as regarded those particular breaches.

With regard to Section 19, he would stress a point which had been made by Mr. Savill, and which it was important to remember. Section 19 of the Act did not, as so many people thought, say that a tenant should be able to get consent to sub-let in every case and that the landlord could not withhold it. Section 19 applied only in cases where the covenant itself against assigning or sub-letting or improvements was made conditional on licence or consent being given. It only dealt with a covenant " against assigning, " underletting, charging or parting with the possession of " demised premises, or any part thereof, without licence or " consent." As he himself read it, if there were an absolute covenant that the tenant should not assign or sub-let, Section 19 afforded no relief at all, and the same remarks—because it was exactly the same legal structure—applied in connection with improvements and in connection with user. He thought perhaps that sometimes that limitation was not quite appreciated. If one had what was a very ordinary covenant—not to assign, &c., without consent—then Section 19 read into it the proviso that the consent should not be unreasonably withheld. If one had an absolute covenant saying nothing whatever about consent, then, he submitted, Section 19 did not help the tenant at all.

Where Captain Creswell said in his note to Section 19 "reasonably" it obviously ought to be "unreasonably."

Mr. Steward also suggested that an assignment might be made to a man of straw, and that the landlord would have no remedy. Personally he thought the landlord would have a remedy, because the point was that the language of the section said that the consent should not be "unreasonably "withheld." If the proposed assignee were shown to be a man of straw he should have thought that, even to the most obtuse Court, that would have been a reason, and a very good one, why the consent should be withheld.

Passing to Section 84 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, and the removal or modification of restrictive covenants, Captain Creswell said: "As to (c) it is not necessary for a covenantor to prove damage." Obviously "covenantee" was the word intended. With regard to restrictive covenants under Section 84, the matter was extremely interesting. One had to remember this—that the whole basis of compensation upon which the official arbitrators, as directed by the Act of Parliament, acted, was that compensation was to be given not on the basis of the value or advantage which the applicant would obtain, but on the basis of the injury to the person who was entitled to the benefit of the covenant. Perhaps he might be allowed to give one brief instance—rather a striking one which he did not suppose would ever be repeated in his experience—of how that worked out sometimes in practice. Three or four years ago he was acting for an applicant who bought twenty acres of land, and the restrictive covenant was not to put up more than one house to the acre. The neighbourhood, since that covenant had been imposed, had deteriorated, and one house to the acre would not have sold at all. It was the sort of neighbourhood where eight houses to the acre was the proper thing. The applicant had applied for relief that one house to the acre might be turned into eight houses to the acre. The people who were entitled to the benefit of the restrictive covenant turned out to be the owners of the neighbouring cemetery ; and he suggested to the arbitrator "I have not got to pay anything here. The cemetery "people are not injured. The only way in which you can "conceive that they would be injured is if you could "imagine that various people departing this life would "leave wills saying that they direct that they should not "be buried in the cemetery because on the land adjoining "thereto there are built eight houses to the acre instead of "one." That, of course, was impossible, and in result the covenant was wholly modified as requested, and the land was appreciated in commercial value ; but the applicant did not have to pay any compensation.

At that late hour of the evening he would not take up any more time by further remarks, but he would desire to join with previous speakers in supporting the vote of thanks to Captain Creswell. As had been well said, there were nearly always two sides to a question. Many of these Acts of Parliament did not perhaps work out in practice quite so badly as they read on paper, and he thought that, with reference to some of the provisions of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, that was the case. There was one point which perhaps might be kept in mind: when certain provisions were put in which were intended (they might not always carry out the intention) to safeguard tenants, very often those provisions had not to be invoked. Their presence on the Statute Book was sufficient, and the tenant might get fairer treatment in consequence of the existence of those provisions, although they might never be put into actual practice.

The vote of thanks was carried by acclamation.

Captain Creswell, in acknowledging the vote, said he had been a member (by examination) of The Institution for thirty-five years. He had gone through all the stages —Professional Associate, Fellow, and Associate. He was, of course, no longer entitled, or, indeed, allowed, to practise as a surveyor.

He had followed the discussion very carefully, which had proved greater and more provocative than he had expected, and had amply rewarded him. He thought the subject had been well amplified both by the mover and by the seconder of the vote of thanks and by all those who had followed after them, especially by his learned friends Mr. Caporn, Mr. Leonard Crouch and Mr. Graham Mould. At that late hour of the night he would not attempt to reply to the discussion, but would communicate his reply in writing.

The meeting then terminated.

The following written reply has been received from the Author:—

On further consideration of the points raised, there does not appear to be much that I can usefully add in reply to the discussion except to say again how grateful I am to them for the added matter and of their expressions of opinion.

In general I am in agreement with all that the speakers said, though much of it went far beyond the scope of my Paper and was therefore not touched upon therein by me.

I have on many occasions upheld Mr. Steward's contention that so much of modern legislation is "aimed "primarily at the landlord" and that landlords need protection quite as much as lessees.

Mr. Savill is, I think, right when he says a claim for forfeiture for breach of a covenant restricting user would came within Section 146 of the Law of Property Act, 1925.

I do not agree with Mr. Davis, as I have always held, and he knows it, that a schedule of dilapidations should not be framed in the form of a specification of the items claimed. I agree with him that exterior painting cannot be looked upon as decoration.

I thank Mr. Graham Mould for directing my attention to the fact that the grant of a new lease is made under Section 5 of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, and that the word "covenantor" in line 12 from the bottom of page 199 should read "covenantee."

THE ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING,

The Report of the Council on the affairs of The Institution and the Statement of Receipts and Expenditure for the year 1931 were read.

IT WAS RESOLVED—" That the Report of the Council and the Balance Sheet be received and approved, and be printed and circulated with the 'Transactions.' "

IT WAS RESOLVED—"That the thanks of The Institution are due, and be most heartily given, to Mr. ALEXANDER GODDARD, C.B.E., for the pre-eminent services he has rendered to The Institution as Secretary, which office he has filled with outstanding ability, unfailing judgment and unsparing devotion to duty for the past twenty-seven years ; and that, in recording its deep appreciation of those services, this meeting also expresses, on behalf of all those whom he has so long and faithfully served, its unanimous hope that health, long life and happiness may attend him in his coming retirement."

IT WAS RESOLVED—" That the thanks of The Institution are due and be given to the PRESIDENT, VICE-PRESIDENTS, and the other MEMBERS AND ASSOCIATES of THE COUNCIL, for the able manner in which they have administered the affairs of The Institution."

IT WAS RESOLVED—" That the thanks of The Institution are due and be given to Mr. H. ARTHUR STEWARD (the Honorary Secretary), to Mr. ALEXANDER GODDARD, C.B.E. (the Secretary), and the other Officers of The Institution, for the able manner in which they have executed their several duties."

IT WAS RESOLVED—" That the thanks of The Institution be given to Messrs. C. DE LA QUINTANA and H. F. CHAMBERS for the efficient performance of their duties as Auditors, and that they be requested to continue their services for the coming year."

IT WAS RESOLVED—" That the thanks of The Institution be given to Messrs. R. H. BAUCHER, A. E. BAYLIS, C. S. BURKETT-SMITH, C. DE LA QUINTANA, J. G. ELSWORTHY, C. T. EVERY, E. B. GILLETT, H. E. GILLETT, H. A. GLOVER, OSWALD HEALING, A. G. KEEN, H. A. MACKMIN, J. E. G. MCSHEEHY, G. V. NYE, W. H. SCANLAN and K. B. STANLEY for their services as Scrutineers."

The CHAIRMAN presented the following Prizes won by Candidates in the Preliminary and Professional Examinations, 1932:—

THE "PENFOLD" GOLD MEDAL,

for the highest marks (over 75% of the maximum) in the Final Examination, to ROBERT LYLE STIRLING, who obtained 78% of the maximum marks.

Mr. STIRLING was also the winner of

THE "WAINWRIGHT" PRIZE,

Being the Interest accruing on a Sum of £500,

awarded to the Candidate in the Final Examination who, having passed the Intermediate Examination in the Non-Students Division, is found to have obtained the highest number of marks in the two Examinations combined.

THE "PENFOLD" SILVER MEDAL, for the highest marks (over 75% of the maximum) in the Students and Non-Students Divisions of the Intermediate Examination (Part II.), to GERALD HOOPER, who obtained 85% of the maximum marks.

Mr. HOOPER was also the winner of "THE INSTITUTION" PRIZE OF THE VALUE OF £15 15*s*.,

awarded to the Candidate at the head of the list in the Students Division of Part II. of the Intermediate Examination.

THE "DRIVER" PRIZE,

Being the Interest accruing on a Sum of £500,

divided between the Non-Student Candidates who obtain the highest marks in Part I. and Part II. respectively of the Intermediate Examination:—

Part I. ... Thomas Faulds, who obtained 84% of the maximum marks.

Part II. ... A. Noble, who obtained 83% of the maximum marks.

Mr. Faulds was also the winner of awarded to the Candidate from Scotland who obtained the highest percentage of marks in Parts I. and II. of the Intermediate Examination. He obtained 72% of the maximum marks.

Mr. Noble was also the winner of obtaining 84% of the maximum marks.

THE "QUANTITIES" PRIZE OF THE VALUE OF £5 5*s*.,

THE "GALSWORTHY" PRIZE,

Being the Interest accruing on a Sum of £500,

awarded to the Candidate in the Final Examination who, having passed the Intermediate Examination in the Students Division, is found to have obtained the highest number of marks in the two Examinations combined, to Stephen Ernest Scammell.

Mr. Scammell was also the winner of

THE "CRAWTER" PRIZE,

Being the Interest accruing on a Sum of £200,

for the best work in "Principles and Practice of Valuation," in which he obtained 95% of the maximum marks.

THE " CONSTRUCTIVE AND WORKING DRAWINGS " PRIZE OF THE VALUE OF £5 5*s*.

THE " SPECIAL " PRIZE OF THE VALUE OF £10 10*s*.

to William Scoular Goodbody, who obtained 83% of the maximum marks in the Students Division of Part I. of the Intermediate Examination.

THE " MELLERSH " PRIZE,

Being the Interest accruing on a Sum of £100,

for the best work in " Outdoor Forestry, Timber Valuing " and Measuring," to Alastair Taunton Jamieson, who obtained 84% of the maximum marks.

THE " BEADEL " PRIZE,

Being the Interest accruing on a Sum of £200,

for the best work in the subject of " Agriculture," to Denis Joseph Cowen, who obtained 85% of the maximum marks.

THE " JOHN GILCHRIST " PRIZE,

Being the Interest accruing on a Sum of £100,

awarded to the Candidate who obtained the highest percentage of marks in the Scottish Final Examination, to Thomas Scott Craig, who obtained 77% of the maximum marks.

THE " JULIAN ROGERS " SCHOLARSHIP, awarded to the Candidate at the head of the list in the Preliminary Examination, to Thomas Grimshaw, who obtained 79% of the maximum marks.

THE SIXTY-FOURTH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE COUNCIL.

Session 1931-1932.

ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING,

Monday, 30th May, 1932.

The outstanding event during the sixty-fourth year of The Institution was the presence of His Royal Highness The Prince George at the Annual Dinner on 8th March. This was the third time that The Institution had had the honour of welcoming a son of His Majesty, Their Royal Highnesses The Prince of Wales and The Duke of York having been present on similar occasions in 1925 and 1928 respectively. The Council wish to take this opportunity of placing on record their indebtedness to His Royal Highness for the signal honour he accorded to members by his presence on that occasion.

The Council.

Mr. H. J. C. Winterton (Lichfield), Mr. E. J. Silcock (Leeds) who withdrew in favour of Sir Charles Gott, and Mr. A. C. Savill (London), retired from the Council at the end of last session. To these gentlemen the sincere thanks of The Institution are due for their invaluable services both on the Council and as members of the several standing and special committees on which they acted during their period of office.

Membership.

In accordance with the usual custom, the tables showing the membership statistics of The Institution to date as compared with previous years are given below:—

Honorary Members ...	31
Colonial Fellows ...	140
1932 Grand Total ...	7794

In 1883, "Associates" were divided into "Ordinary" and "Professional" Associates.

The following Honorary Members were elected during the year:—

Lord Clinton, P.C., formerly Chairman of the Forestry Commission;

Brigadier H. St. J. L. Winterbotham, C.M.G., D.S.O., R.E., Director-General of Ordnance Survey.

The list of members whose loss by death must be mourned includes a number of distinguished names, among them those of Colonel Sir Duncan Johnston, K.C.M.G., R.E. (Hon. Member), formerly Director-General of Ordnance Survey; Sir Howard Frank, BT., G.B.E., K.C.B. (Fellow), whose public services during and after the War are well known; and Sir William Somerville, K.B.E. (Associate), Emeritus Professor of Rural Economy at the University of Oxford.

Among other members of long standing whose death occurred during the year the following may be mentioned: Mr. W. H. Williams, Burnham (1880); Mr. Joseph Stower, London (1882); Mr. F. Higgins, Alford (1884); Mr. J. W. Peto, Reading (1885); Mr. E. G. Righton, Evesham (1888); Mr. Charles Mason, Louth (1889); Mr. E. J. Partridge, London (1890), a past-president of the Society of Architects; Mr. G. Richardson, Carlisle (1890); Mr. Douglas Young, London (1890); Mr. J. M. Cable, London (1891); Mr. J. W. Hurrell, Manchester (1891), a past-member of the Quantity Surveyors' Committee; Mr. J. W. Millyard, Kingston (1891); Mr. E. V. Whitaker, London (1893); Mr. W. A. Leaning, London (1894); Mr. D. T. Thring, Oxford (1894), a past-president of the Land Agents' Society; Colonel J. R. Baillie, Coleraine (1895); Mr. T. N. Edgeworth, Booterstown (1895); and Mr. James Mather, Edinburgh (1900). Obituary notices of these and other well-known members have already appeared in the "Journal."

Finance.

The report of the auditors on the Balance Sheet for the year 1931 indicates that the finances of The Institution are in a sound condition. Owing to the large entry of candidates for both the January and March examinations, the balance in hand on this account, apart from office and other overhead charges not separately charged thereto, amounted to £1,770, while the addition to Capital Account from the entrance fees of newly elected members was £1,576. A new arrangement with The Institution printers and other economies have resulted in considerable savings out of which additional expenditure on County Branch activities, and on the endeavour to keep The Institution before the public, have been met. The auditors have suggested that £5,000 should be placed to reserve, a recommendation that the Finance Committee and Council will bear in mind during the coming year.

The Examinations.

The examinations held in March were the first to take place under the altered Rules and Syllabus. The inclusion of new subjects, the division of the Intermediate Examination into two parts, and the increasing number of candidates, have added considerably to the task of organising this section of the work of The Institution. It was, for example, necessary to arrange for the Outdoor Examination at Osterley to be held on two days instead of one as previously, and to provide indoor accommodation in three large halls in different parts of London.

The credit of having planned and carried through without hitch the heavy task of organising the arrangements for the examination of some 1,400 candidates belongs to the Chief Clerk, Mr. C. A. Bennett, whose services the Council take this opportunity of acknowledging.

The Council decided during the year to set up a Special Examination to meet the requirements of women house-property managers who wish to become connected with The Institution but whose professional duties are not wide enough to fulfil the training conditions laid down for the Intermediate and Final. Candidates are required to have passed either the Preliminary or an exempting examination, and to have undergone at least twelve months' approved training before sitting for the examination. Successful candidates will be granted the Certificate of The Institution for Women House-Property Managers, which will be valid for five years and renewable at the end of that period. Holders of the Certificate will have privileges similar to those of other non-corporate members.

There were 72 Scottish Candidates, of whom 24 entered for Part I. and 16 for Parts I. and II. of the Intermediate, 21 for the Final and Direct Fellowship, and 11 for Typical Subjects. Of these, 30 passed Part I. and 12 Part II. of the Intermediate, 24 the Final and Direct Fellowship, and 5 were referred back in their Typical Subjects.

Nine candidates sat in Dublin, and of these, 6 satisfied the examiners in Part I. of the Intermediate, 1 in the Final, while 1 was referred back in his Typical Subject.

One candidate sat for the examination for the Women House-Property Manager's Certificate, and was successful.

The Special Diploma Examinations.

Twelve candidates presented themselves for the Rating Diploma Examination in June, and of these seven qualified for the Diploma. The successful candidates were: Messrs. S. V. Abel (Reading), B. B. Bolton (Manchester), C. P. Bowyer (Slough), A. Lockwood (Guildford), N. E. Mackay (Ayr), H. D. S. Stiles (Brighton), and N. A. Webb (Chester).

Insufficient applications were received to enable any of the other Diploma Examinations to be held in a non-triennial year.

The preparation of the Syllabus, and other arrangements for the Special Diploma Examination in Town Planning, were completed during the year, and the first examination will be conducted in July next by a Joint Board on which the Town Planning Institute, the Royal Institute of British Architects, the Institution of Municipal and County Engineers and The Institution are represented. The Council hope that members will recognise the advantages of obtaining a Special Diploma in this subject, the importance of which will increase with the proposed extension of planning powers to rural and fully developed areas.

The Examiners.

The Council must again acknowledge the invaluable services of the Examiners, who in all cases are busy professional men and have, as usual, carried out their arduous and responsible duties with meticulous care. Their names are as follows:—

The Scholarships.

Four candidates presented themselves this year for the Scholarship of £100 offered annually by the Council and tenable for three years at Cambridge University. Of these, Mr. W. F. Carnaby (Uppingham School) was selected as possessing in personality, mental capacity and school record, both scholastic and athletic, the qualities which make for success in the profession. Six candidates presented themselves for the Scholarships, value £125 each, which are offered annually either for a year's course of special study at Cambridge, or for travel. Mr. S. E. Scammell and Mr. W. M. F. Vane, B.A.CANTAB., both of whom have already entered the profession and have passed their examinations, were each awarded one of these Scholarships. Mr. Scammell intends to travel in northern Europe to study agricultural and economic conditions, and Mr. Vane in Germany to study agriculture, forestry, and recent political action and aspects of land reform.

The College of Estate Management.

The President of The Institution (Mr. J. E. Bidwell) has been elected President of the College, this being the first occasion on which the two offices have been held simultaneously ; Sir John Oakley, G.B.E., Mr. C. H. Bedells, and Mr. Frank Hunt, C.V.O., were re-nominated by the Council as Governors of the College on their period of office coming to a close. It is worthy of record that in November the final donation of £500 was paid by The Institution to the College funds, bringing the total sum granted to £5,000.

In the recent professional examinations 13 out of the 15 medals and prizes went to students of the College, and of the candidates prepared by them, 259 passed Part I. and 6 passed Part II. of the Intermediate Examination, while 139 passed both Parts I. and II. 177 passed the Final Examination, 4 the Direct Fellowship, 2 the Special Degree Holders' Examination, and 1 the Women's House Property Manager's Certificate.

The Annual Summer Meeting.

The Annual Summer Meeting was held in June at Newcastle-on-Tyne. A report of the meeting appeared in the " Journal " for August, but the Council must here acknowledge the indebtedness of The Institution to the Lord Mayor and Corporation of Newcastle-on-Tyne, the Mayor and Dean of Durham, the Tyne Improvement Commissioners, Messrs. C. A. Parsons & Company, Limited, Colonel G. R. B. Spain, C.M.G., and the others whose services helped so materially in making the meeting a success. The thanks of the Council are also due to the Chairman (Mr. A. E. Killick, O.B.E.), the Hon. Secretary (Mr. T. Cuthbertson Hill), and the Reception Committee of the Northumberland and Durham Branch, for the admirable arrangements which they made for the meeting, and for the efficiency with which they carried out the programme.

The Publications.

The programme of Papers read and discussed at Ordinary General Meetings during the session was as follows:—

Date.	Subject of Paper.	Author.
1931. Nov. 9...	The Opening Address ...	The President.
Dec. 7...	The Wheat Quota	Colonel E. A. Ruggles-Brise, M.C., M.P.
1932. Jan. 11...	The Genius of Wren ...	Mr. Percy W. Lovell, Secretary of the London Society.
Feb. 8...	Regional Planning and Economy	Mr. Thomas Adams (Fellow).
March 7...	Causes, Consequence and Cure of Damp in Buildings	Mr. R. Fitzmaurice, B.SC., of the Building Research Station
April 11	A Consideration of the Rent Restriction Act Committee's Report	Mr. Edward W. Eason (Fellow).
May 9...	Effect of Recent Legislation on Covenants and their Enforcement	Captain W. T. Creswell, Barrister-at-Law (Associate).

Attendances at the meetings were well maintained, and the technical value of the Papers read were enhanced by the discussions which followed them. The Council are greatly indebted to the lecturers, whose names are given above.

Reference may be made to two publications which have been issued during the year. "The Chartered Surveyor: His "Training and His Work," to which the Rt. Hon. Winston Churchill, M.P., contributed a foreword, gives an account, in concise and handy form, of the history and scope of the surveying profession as a whole. It has been widely circulated. The other, a pamphlet on "The Sale, Purchase, and Letting of Property" was prepared for the guidance of the occasional buyer and seller of real estate, and deals, inter alia, with the advantages of instructing agents possessing recognised professional qualifications. Copies of both publications may be obtained from The Institution at a small charge, and the Council hope that members will co-operate in securing wide dissemination of their contents.

The Council's Memorandum on "The Taxation of Land "Values, as proposed in Part III. of the Finance Act, "1931" was issued in leaflet form, and attracted considerable attention in Parliament and the Press.

The Library and Collections.

The value of the Library and Loan Library as sources of reference has been maintained by the purchase of a number of new books on professional subjects and new editions of existing works.

An exhibit of old maps and plans from The Institution collection was placed on view at the meeting of the Empire Surveyors' Conference, which was held at 12, Great George Street on 9th July.

Exhibits were sent from the Forestry Museum to the Royal and Royal Welsh Agricultural Shows at Warwick and Llanelly, and each was awarded a bronze medal. The Curator (Mr. A. D. C. Le Sueur) was responsible for selecting and arranging them.

By arrangement with the British Wood Preserving Association, a special exhibit, dealing with timber preservation, was placed on view in the Museum from November to March. The items consisted of examples illustrating the use of various types of wood preservative, including the " wood bandage " and creosoting by incision. Examples of damage by fungal disease and wood-boring beetles, and of the " Oxylene " process of fire-proofing, were also shown.

A new collection has been started with the object of illustrating the effect of certain trade uses upon various types of timber. Two prize-winning exhibits have been presented to the plank exhibition. An exhibit of bat-willow timber is being prepared for this year's Royal Show at Southampton, and will be set up in the Museum on its return.

The thanks of the Council are due to the undermentioned for presentations of exhibits to the Museum during the year: Sir Emmanuel Hoyle, Messrs. Benyon, Parker, and Winterbotham, Messrs. L. P. Foreman & Son, and the Powell Duffryn Steam Coal Company, Limited.

The Standing and Special Committees.

Eleven meetings of the Council and ninety-two meetings of Standing and Special Committees have been held since the beginning of the session. The Parliamentary Committee, as usual, have had a busy year, their work having been centred, in particular, on Part III. of the Finance Bill, 1931, and the Town and Country Planning Bills of 1931 and 1932. Twenty amendments were put down to the Town and Country Planning Bill of 1931, and of these, eleven were accepted by the Standing Committee on the Bill. Subsequently the measure was again scrutinised, and a memorandum embodying some 44 suggestions for its further improvement was drawn up and presented to the Ministry of Health. Of these suggestions, 20 were incorporated in the Bill on its re-introduction into Parliament in February. Among other matters which came before the Committee were: The inclusion of agents in the interpretation of " owner " under the Public Health Acts ; the need for assimilating the rights to claim derating in London and the provinces ; the want of uniformity in the treatment of ground rents for Schedule A purposes ; and various questions arising under the following Private Bills: Bognor Regis U.D.C., Bury Corporation, Rochdale Corporation, and South Wales Electric Power.

Steps were taken so to amend the Irish Auctioneers Registration Bill as to protect members from being adversely affected by its provisions in the carrying out of their professional duties as surveyors.

The advice of The Institution was asked in connection with the revision of the London Building Act, 1930, which is now being undertaken by the London County Council. A Special Committee was set up, and a comprehensive list of suggested amendments prepared and forwarded to the Council.

The representations which were made last session to the County Court Judges' Association on the desirability of technical arbitrations being referred to persons possessing recognised professional qualifications has had a satisfactory result. The County Court Rules Committee has expressed itself as in agreement with the attitude of The Institution, and has brought their representations to the notice of the judges of the County Court.

Legal steps were taken on two occasions during the year to stop the use of The Institution letters and designations by unauthorised persons. In each case the Court granted a perpetual injunction, with costs, restraining the defendants from further use of the letters. The precedents which those cases set up will both safeguard the rights of members and be of service to professional societies generally in dealing with this form of offence.

The work of the Agricultural and Forestry Committees, apart from the arrangements for the Agricultural Conference, has included the consideration of several interesting practical points, including uniformity in the assessment of agricultural dilapidations ; the admissibility of a maintenance claim for the cost of converting stables into cowsheds ; the admissibility of compensation for temporary pasture in a case where a claim for permanent pasture had been put in but not proceeded with, and the time for making a fresh claim had expired ; and the liability of an outgoing tenant for dilapidations if he sold off hay which the landlord had refused to take over.

The Rating Diploma Section has held three meetings when useful discussions took place on the following subjects, the first two of which were introduced by means of Papers read by Mr. W. S. Willis and A. H. London (Professional Associates) respectively: The Railways (Valuation for Rating) Act, 1930, the proviso to Section 1 (3), with special reference to properties so let as to be separately assessable ; the rating of houses occupied in parts ; the date of the next revaluation in the provinces ; the valuation of farmhouses, of licensed premises, and of hospitals.

Professional Conduct.

A Code of Conduct for observance by members in the carrying on of their business, prepared by the Professional Practice Committee and adopted by the Council, was issued to members on 1st January.

The Agricultural Conference.

A Conference of Agricultural Members, arranged by the Agricultural Committee and the first of its kind, was held in December. The attendance numbered 83, and included members who had travelled to London from all parts of the country in order to be present. The morning was given up to the discussion of subjects of practical interest to members in country practice, opened by Mr. A. J. Burrows, Sir Charles Gott, and Mr. A. W. Merry respectively ; the afternoon to a Paper by Mr. Sydney Mager, C.B.E., entitled " Can The Institution be made of greater " value to Agricultural Members?" This Paper was full of constructive suggestions, and provoked an animated discussion.

The success of the Conference, of which a report appeared in the " Journal " for January, fully justifies the holding of similar Conferences in the future.

The County Branches.

The President and Secretary have visited the majority of the Branches during the year, and have been impressed by the businesslike manner in which their affairs are administered and by the interest shown in the meetings. The " Reports of Branch Meetings " which appear month by month in the " Journal " clearly indicate how real an influence on the profession throughout the country is exercised by the Branch Organisation.

Among the many subjects on which Papers were read and discussed at Branch meetings during the year were: Sporting rights ; urban property values ; the new code of professional conduct ; the Agricultural Marketing Act, 1931 ; the Finance Act, 1931, Part III. ; the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 ; the Land Drainage Act, 1930 ; the Town and Country Planning Bill ; highway administration ; damp walls in houses ; estate repairs and maintenance claims ; and colliery damage claims ;—a list which, though by no means comprehensive, sufficiently indicates the scope and variety of the proceedings.

The Annual Conference of the Council with the Chairmen and Honorary Secretaries of the County Branches was held at headquarters on 8th March. A report of the proceedings appeared in the " Journal " for April.

The Council must here acknowledge their indebtedness to all the officers and members of Branch Executives for the loyal and unselfish serviçe they have given to The Institution and their fellow-members during the year.

The Junior Organisation.

The programme of meetings, Papers and discussions arranged for evening meetings in London during the session was as follows: "Obsolescence and Depreciation "as affecting Property Values," by Mr. F. A. Wagstaff (Professional Associate) (awarded the President's Prize); "The New Land Value Tax and its Effect on the Value of "Real Property," by Mr. H. G. May (Professional Associate) (awarded the Ryde Memorial Prize by the Chartered Surveyors' (1913) Club); "Derating in the High "Courts," by Mr. H. P. Hobbs (Professional Associate); "Tools of a Trade: Being an account of the Evolution of "Maps and Surveying Instruments," by Mr. D. H. Burn (Professional Associate); "The Economic Aspect of Agri-"culture in Great Britain," by Mr. R. S. Bond (Professional Associate); "Modern Architecture: a Basis for "Criticism," by Mr. N. A. Garrard (Professional Associate); and a Mock Arbitration under the Town Planning Act, 1925, in which Mr. Gerald Eve (Senior Vice-President) acted as the official arbitrator.

The Annual Full Committee Meeting was held on 11th December, and was attended by representatives from all the Junior Branches, as well as the London and unattached Country Members.

The Annual Dinner, at which 116 were present, was held the same evening, among the guests being the Presidents of The Institution and the Land Agents' Society. A feature of the dinner was that everything consumed had been produced entirely within Great Britain and the Empire.

Mr. C. H. Hunt was awarded the Chartered Surveyors' (1913) Club Prize for having made the greatest contribution, otherwise than by writing a Paper, to the success of the Sessional Meetings during the year.

The Chairman for the year was Mr. H. F. Chambers, and the Hon. Secretary Mr. J. A. F. Watson. The names of the Junior Committee appear in the current List of Members. To them, and to those responsible for directing the activities of the Junior Branches throughout the country, the thanks of the Council are most heartily due for their invaluable work on behalf of The Institution.

The Employment Register.

The world-wide depression in trade and industry culminating in the financial crisis of last September has naturally had its repercussions upon employment. In particular, the drastic curtailment of building works by public bodies, necessary though it may have been in the national interest, has been severely felt in the profession. In this connection it may be mentioned that a deputation, on which The Institution was represented, attended upon the Minister of Health in February to call attention to the serious unemployment in the building industry and its allied professions and trades.

Representations were made by the Council to the Prime Minister in January urging that the valuers thrown out of employment, by reason of the suspension of Part III. of the Finance Act should be given first consideration for other technical posts falling vacant in the Government service or, where suitable, for such new appointments as might have to be made in consequence of the changes in fiscal policy.

Special efforts were made during the year to keep the Employment Register continually before members and others who might be able to offer employment. The result, considering the abnormal times, may be looked upon as encouraging.

During the period under review there were 501 names entered on the Register, of which 268 were at one time or other out of employment, 224 were seeking improved positions, 4 were looking out for part-time work, 3 entered private practice, 1 went abroad, and 1 left the profession. The appointments obtained through the Register during the year numbered 102, of which 18 were in the land agency branch, 49 in the valuation branch, and 10, 24 and 1 respectively in building, quantities, and mining.

Miscellaneous.

The Institution were closely identified with the Empire Survey Conference which was called together in London by H.M. Secretary of State for the Colonies last July. The Second Session of the Conference was held under the chairmanship of Mr. G. Turville Brown (Vice-President) in the Lecture Hall at Great George Street on 9th July, when Sir Charles Close, K.B.E., C.B. (Hon. Member), who represented The Institution with Mr. Edward Willis, read a Paper on "The Public Use of Large-Scale Ordnance "Maps." Mr. G. T. McCaw (Fellow) was an active member of the Committee responsible for organising the Conference.

The Council has issued, and the International Federation of Surveyors has accepted, an invitation to hold the next International Congress of Surveyors in London. The Congress will take place in 1934.

The Institution was invited during the year to co-operate through its members with Government Departments on the respective matters mentioned below:—

Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries.—(1) Conference to discuss the difficulties in the present position of Tithe-payers; representatives, Mr. P. F. Tuckett and Mr. A. Lacy Scott.

(2) Conference on prevention of damage by Grey Squirrels; representative, Mr. Robert Cobb.

Admiralty and Air Ministry.—Selection Board for appointment of Assistant Surveyors; representative, Mr. J. M. Theobald.

Ministry of Transport.—Conference on Subways and other Underground Equipment; representative, Mr. Edward Willis.

Inland Revenue. — Selection of candidates for appointment to the Valuation Office: Mr. P. F. Tuckett.

Department of Scientific and Industrial Research.—Reinforced Concrete Committee, Building Research Board; representatives, Mr. A. Burnett Brown and Mr. Oswald Healing.

Mention must also be made of the Minister of Health's Departmental Committee on Garden Cities and Satellite Towns, of which Sir Theodore Chambers, K.B.E. (Fellow), was appointed Chairman, and Sir Charles Gott (Member of Council) a member.

The Departmental Committee on the Rent Restriction Acts, of which Mr. Gerald Eve (Senior Vice-President) was a member, presented their report to Parliament in July, 1931. Messrs. Dendy Watney (Past-President) and H. E. Sherwin (Member of Council) gave evidence on behalf of The Institution.

The Rt. Hon. Sir J. Tudor Walters (Fellow) was appointed Chairman, and Sir Theodore Chambers and Sir J. Walker Smith (Fellows) members of the Advisory Committee appointed by the Minister of Health for the purposes of the Housing (Rural Authorities) Act, 1931.

Mr. Dendy Watney (Past-President) was appointed to represent The Institution on the Architects Registration Council, pursuant to the provisions of the Architects Registration Act, 1931, and Mr. Herbert A. Steward (Hon. Secretary) on the Admission Committee.

Mr. Frank Hunt, C.V.O. (Member of Council), was appointed upon a Committee to report on the provision of accommodation for, and the financing of, the London Section of the British Industries Fair.

Mr. C. H. Bedells (Past-President) continues to represent The Institution on the Advisory Committee of the London County Council on the amendment of the London Building Acts.

Co-operation with the Central Landowners' Association and the Land Agents' Society has been continued in the matter of electricity wayleaves. A test case, West Midlands Electricity Authority v. Pitt, was fought during the year, first in the Divisional Court and subsequently in the Court of Appeal, in order to determine who was the proper authority to settle compensation where terms could not be agreed for the grant of a wayleave. The view taken by the co-operating societies, viz., that the Minister of Transport was not the proper authority, was upheld in the lower Court and again on appeal. Financial aid was given by the Council towards the cost of this litigation.

Representatives of the Royal Institute of British Architects and The Institution waited upon the Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries in March in order to call attention to the need for a more frequent revision of the English Ordnance Survey maps.

Members of The Institution took part in an official visit to the Shipping, Engineering and Machinery Exhibition at Olympia on 24th September. The thanks of the Council are due to the organisers for the courtesy and hospitality which were shown to members on that occasion.

The Council of Agriculture for England, set up under the Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries Act, 1919, now includes among its members Lord Clinton (Hon. Member), the Earl of Selborne, K.G. (Hon. Member), Mr. C. S. Orwin (Associate), and Mr. A. Goddard, C.B.E. (Secretary), who hold their appointments from the Minister of Agriculture; and Messrs. W. McCracken and T. Warner Turner (Chartered Surveyors), representing Cheshire and Nottinghamshire respectively.

Mr. J. E. Bidwell (President), Mr. Robert Cobb (Fellow) and the Secretary continue to represent The Institution as Deputies in the Central Chamber of Agriculture.

During the period under review the President has made the following appointments to Statutory Committees set up under private Acts for the purpose of advising local authorities upon the elevation of buildings:—

Chester Corporation: Mr. F. J. KIRBY.

Brighton Corporation: Mr. J. C. BOWLEY.

ADDENDUM.

Notes from the Reports of the Examiners, 1932.

These notes are written with the object of calling attention to special defects in the examination work of the year, rather than as a general review. It is sufficient, therefore, to state that satisfactory reports have been received from the examiners as to the standard attained generally by candidates in the following subjects: The Law Relating to Land; Law of Landlord and Tenant; Law of Mortgages; Law of Arbitration ; The London Building Act ; Law of Vendors and Purchasers ; Law of Fixtures and Dilapidations ; Measurement and Valuation of Dilapidations ; Valuation of Mineral Properties ; Mine Rents and Royalties ; Support and Subsidence ; Central and Local Government ; Book-keeping ; Estate Accounts ; Draughtsmanship ; Constructive and Working Drawings ; Report (Sub-Divisions III. and IV.) ; Levelling (Indoor Work) ; Geology and Soils.

The following mistakes in spelling are reported: council (for counsel) ; reverence (for reference) ; Parliment (for Parliament) ; heresay (for hearsay). The word " reward " was used many times when " award " was meant. A number of examiners have again commented on careless reading of their questions and instructions ; on the imperfect understanding and loose use of legal and technical terms ; on lack of lucidity in expression, and in some cases, even among candidates who had clearly studied their subject carefully and intelligently, a tendency to write down the opposite of what they had intended to say. In one or two of the legal subjects candidates seemed better able to quote extracts from an Act of Parliament, &c., verbatim, than to explain its provisions in their own words. This, while implying industry, does not necessarily convince an examiner that the candidate has grasped the essentials of the point he has set out to explain.

The following notes summarise the reports on the individual subjects:—

Agricultural Science.—Standard as a whole poor ; there was an almost general lack of acquaintance with the principles of animal feeding, and with the symptoms and characteristics of malnutrition in plants. The importance of lime was insufficiently appreciated. Many candidates lacked power of observation in the field. The greater number could not distinguish betwen common grains, seeds and manures.

Chemistry and Biology.—Candidates were unable to describe practical experiments and were not conversant with the subject-matter of the recommended text-books. Standard as a whole low.

Geology and Soils.—Few candidates knew what a drift geological map was. It is specially useful to surveyors in agricultural practice and should be studied.

Applied Geology.—Standard extremely low, in fact only one candidate really approached the level of knowledge required. Candidates generally appear to have neglected the recommended text-books and to lack an adequate grounding in practical geology.

Forestry.—The examiner has drawn attention in particular to poor entomology and forest botany, lack of observation in the field, and the fact that many candidates regard birch as a timber tree of economic importance There is also a somewhat exaggerated belief in the power of the sun to cause forest fires.

Surveying (Indoor).—The mathematics underlying the use of circular curves was a weak point. The importance of field-work to the accuracy of the plotted survey was not always realised.

Levelling (Indoor).—The question on setting out of levels was badly answered. There was a tendency to looseness in the use of important technical terms.

Road-making.—Standard disappointing as a whole; modern methods of highway engineering used for accommodating fast traffic had been almost wholly neglected. The importance of surveying and levelling in this subject was insufficiently appreciated. Current articles in the trade and technical journals on this subject should be more closely studied.

Land Drainage.—Insufficient attention had been given to open channel drainage schemes and to the powers and duties of the authorities responsible for administering the Land Drainage Act, 1930.

Law relating to Land.—Only a few candidates dealt satisfactorily with the distinction between freehold and leaseholds interests in land and the historical reasons for that distinction. There was some confusion as to the leasing powers of a mortgagor.

Law of Landlord and Tenant.—The examiner reports the following as the chief sources of failure: The alteration in the law as to the liabilities of lessees affected by the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927; the meaning of " decontrol " under the Rent Restriction Acts, of " agricultural holding " under the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923, of " reversionary " lease " and " mesne landlord." A common error was also made in saying that a lease for three years or less might be granted by parol but was not enforceable. Such candidates should refer to the Land Registration Act, 1925, Section 118.

Law of Mortgages.—Confusion existed as to the legal and equitable right to redeem mortgages entered into prior to 1926.

London Building Act.—Too little attention had been given to definitions, steel-frame buildings, and the statutory provisions for fire protection.

Law of Easements.—Leading legal decisions might have been more carefully studied. The same remark applies to Fixtures and Dilapidations.

Law of Arbitration.—General standard satisfactory, but some weakness was shown in procedure and evidence, and the conduct of proceedings before and after the hearing.

Law of Vendors and Purchasers.—On the whole, good ; but a rather large proportion of candidates saw no danger in altering the terminology of particulars and conditions of sale.

Economics.—The general standard was distinctly low. Many candidates appear to have treated this paper as a "cram" test on Professor Clay's book, and in some cases to have attempted, even, to learn that work by heart. Whole passages were quoted verbatim in a number of papers, often irrelevantly. Less than 25 per cent. of the candidates attempted the question on speculation, a matter specifically included in the Syllabus.

Agricultural Valuations.—The standard was unsatisfactory with few exceptions. The questions were all based on points which had arisen in actual practice, but the point in each case was missed by the majority of candidates.

Valuations.—The general standard, compared with recent years, was low. The examiners' comment in particular upon untidy setting out of calculations, leading to confusion and error ; the mixing up of life and reversionary interests ; difficulty in dealing with the premium value of a lease to be surrendered, and working out the rent for a new lease for a longer term ; and confusion between the single and dual-rate years' purchase tables.

The examiner in the lower paper, taken by Land Agency and Building candidates, remarks upon the lack of elementary knowledge in the use of tables.

Careless reading of the questions set appears to have been a general fault throughout.

Valuation of Mineral Properties.—No allowance was made in many cases for faults, bad coal, mineral rights duty and welfare levy. There was also a tendency not to distinguish between present values of immediate as compared with deferred annuities, as well as a weakness in dealing with " shorts " or " overpayments."

Mine Rents and Royalties.—Most candidates failed badly in the question on the conversion of a footage royalty per statute acre into an equivalent royalty per Cheshire acre and per ton. Some weakness was shown in the questions on minerals other than coal.

Support and Subsidence.—Sketches and printing might have been better.

Imperial Taxation.—Standard lower than in former years. There was a marked tendency to omit answering the practical questions. Too little attention has been given to the working out of examples of assessments, and there was a good deal of confusion between Schedules A and B.

Book-keeping.—Many candidates wrote their answers on both side of a sheet, a fault which should be avoided.

Estate Accounts.—The value of analytical account-keeping was not sufficiently appreciated.

Draughtsmanship.—Weakness was shown in freehand sketching and the reading of Ordnance Survey maps signs. Too much time was wasted in lengthy descriptions of instruments when all that was asked for was a brief note as to their uses.

Constructive and Working Drawings.—In the higher papers the examiners comment upon indifferent draughtsmanship and lack of knowledge of joinery-work. The reports on the the lowers papers, taken by quantity surveyor candidates, were good.

Drainage and Sanitation.—The work in the Intermediate showed that more attention should be given to materials. In the Final, while the general principles of hygienic planning and lay-out were well understood, the great majority of the hot-water supply systems designed by candidates could not have worked at all. Sewage disposal was only vaguely understood, a serious defect in view of its importance for country houses under modern conditions. Generally, there was too much reliance on theory and a failure to visualise practical pitfalls.

Heating and Ventilation.—There was considerable lack of decision in applying theoretical principles to the three practical questions in the paper. Too much emphasis was given to minor details, particularly in the question on heating and hot-water supply in a private house. Few candidates knew how testing should be carried out. Some candidates insisted that air contained 80 per cent. of hydrogen ; others were careless with their decimal points, and said that 4 per cent. of carbon dioxide was a fair average content instead of 0·04 per cent.

Measurement of Builders' Work. — This subject is specifically one for building surveyors, but there was a marked tendency among candidates to approach it as quantity surveyors, particularly in their methods of measuring and billing. Knowledge was lacking of the method of transposing measurements to materials ; for example, few candidates knew the number of bricks to a rod of brickwork. Such knowledge is essential for checking builders' accounts. Many candidates failed to make proper collections in the waste ; to note underneath the items to which part of the building they referred ; some wrote their dimensions in the wrong column ; and a number did not know how to measure tiling, rafters, &c., to a roof with one hipped end.

Specifications.—Time was wasted in repeating conditions of contract, payment, penalties, maintenance, &c. Many candidates did not realise that broken brick is a suitable aggregate for concrete as well as Thames ballast ; or that their drainage specification was incomplete without provision for gulleys or ventilation.

Quantities.—Many candidates were at fault in the measurement of "spot items" or shoring. Few wrote dimensions correctly at the first attempt ; in most cases "nil" was written against them and correct dimensions inserted later ; and in some descriptions only were given without dimensions.

In the Intermediate half the candidates failed to get the correct perimeter of the playground—a serious error. In the roof question there was little attempt at accuracy in dimensions for roof-slopes, length of hips and valleys, eaves, soffits, &c. Candidates generally did not seem to realise (a) the necessity for absolute clearness in the setting out of dimensions ; (b) that the fewer the figures used in dimensions and sidecasts the better, provided the required results are obtained ; (c) that accuracy in measurement is a first principle in taking off, and that it is as easy to be accurate as inaccurate.

Report.—The examiners in all four sub-divisions state that candidates on the whole showed ample evidence of technical knowledge of their subject. Land Agency and Valuation candidates would have done better if they had started with a plan of headings so arranged as to enable them to marshal their facts in sequence, and to present a connected narrative leading naturally from paragraph to paragraph, so as to culminate finally in conclusions and advice. As it was, headings, though frequently used, tended merely to form the beginning of disjointed comment applicable to the particular paragraph. The use of headings to index a report was not understood.

Candidates in Sub-division III. were not sufficiently acquainted with recent drainage bye-laws. Time was wasted in telling the client—who had already bought the house—about its situation, number and sizes of rooms, &c.

ROYAL CHARTERS.

Royal Charters are granted by the Sovereign on the advice of the Lords of His Privy Council.

The grant of a Charter to a professional society may therefore be taken as indicating that the highest authority in the kingdom is satisfied that a high standard of professional qualification is required for membership, and that the society is in a position to advance technical knowledge, to raise and maintain the status of the profession it represents, and to provide information on subjects coming within its scope to the public advantage.

The

(INCORPORATED BY ROYAL CHARTER)

Is established under the terms of its Royal Charters :—

1. To secure the advancement and facilitate the acquisition of that knowledge which constitutes the profession of a Surveyor, viz.—the art of determining the value of all descriptions of landed, mineral and house property, and of the various interests therein; the practice of managing and developing estates; and the science of admeasuring and delineating the physical features of the earth, and of measuring and estimating artificers' work.
2. To promote the general interests of the profession, and to maintain and extend its usefulness for the public advantage.

THE INSTITUTION was founded in 1868 under the title of The Institution of Surveyors. It was incorporated under Royal Charter in 1881, the name then being changed to The Surveyors' Institution. A further Charter was granted in 1921. In October, 1930, by permission of H.M.'s Privy Council the title of the Institution was changed to The Chartered Surveyors' Institution. Entrance examinations to qualify for membership were started in 1881, and became compulsory in 1891. The Institution was, therefore, the first professional society, other than those representing law and medicine, to initiate severe examination tests as the qualification for membership.

PRIVILEGES OF MEMBERSHIP.

Fellows and Professional Associates are permitted to place the initials F.S.I. and P.A.S.I. respectively after their names, and to use the designation "Chartered Surveyor," subject to the provisions of the By-Laws. Membership of the Institution, as indicated by the use of these letters and designation, is laid down as an essential qualification for many official and other appointments. Its value is also becoming increasingly recognised in connection with work for trustees, mortgage valuations, arbitrations, evidence before the Courts, etc.

Members, both corporate and non-corporate, have the right to attend the Ordinary General Meetings, meetings of their County Branch, and, if under 33 years of age, the Junior Meetings, and have the privilege of introducing visitors. They receive the Journal, which is issued in twelve monthly parts, and a copy of any other printed publication issued by the Institution. They may avail themselves of the Queries and Replies section of the Journal, and so secure the benefit of the knowledge and experience of fellow members in questions arising in daily practice. They may use the Library and Loan Library and the Employment Register.

The Chartered Surveyors' Benevolent Fund is established to provide for the needs of members and their dependents who, by reason of age, sickness or other unavoidable misfortune, are unable to support themselves. It is maintained entirely by voluntary contributions.

ORGANIZATION AND ACTIVITIES.

The affairs of the Institution are under the management of a Council, elected annually by ballot of all corporate members. The Council are advised by the County Branches and a number of Standing and Special Committees appointed to consider the various matters referred to them. Their work includes the examination of Parliamentary Bills affecting the valuation, management, and development of landed property, and the various interests therein; the preparation of memoranda, and the submission of evidence for the use of Government Departments, Royal Commissions and departmental and other Committees in connection with matters upon which the collective knowledge of the profession would prove of assistance; and the rendering of advice to Imperial or Local Authorities when called upon to do so by statute or otherwise.

In addition to their activities in the advancement of the public interest, the Council have continually in view the elevation, ethical as well as intellectual, of the profession which they represent. In addition to the practical help which they have afforded to places of professional instruction, the foundation of scholarships and the furtherance of technical education generally, they have felt it their duty strictly to adminster the rules of conduct which all members are required by the By-Laws to observe. The Council have also, through their Professional Practice Committee, used their influence in inspiring a high ideal of professional honour among members.

The Session of the Institution commences annually on the second Monday in November, and continues to the end of May. The Ordinary General Meetings are held monthly during the Session, and in addition two Meetings of members practising in Quantities are arranged At these Meetings original papers on professional subjects are read and their merits fully and freely discussed. Every member has the privilege of introducing visitors.

THE COUNTY BRANCHES.

The organization of the Institution includes a system of Metropolitan and County Branches, the object of which is to enable the Council to give the considered views of the profession from all parts of the country on matters of public interest; to afford opportunity for members generally to take an active part in the affairs of the Institution; and to assist the Council in ascertaining their local wants and wishes. The system includes machinery for local representation on, and succession to, the Council and Standing Committees and provides, in addition, opportunities for the discussion of professional questions and social intercourse at centres easily accessible to members in country districts. The affairs of each Metropolitan and County Branch are managed by an Executive Committee elected annually.

THE JUNIOR ORGANIZATION.

The Junior Organization was established for the benefit of the younger members of the Institution, to bring them into closer touch with the Council, and, by fostering among them an interest in professional affairs, to prepare them for higher office in the future. The work of the Junior Organization is administered by a representative Central Executive Committee which is responsible to the Council for their affairs as a whole. Junior branches in the County Branch districts have been established in seventeen County Branch areas.

SCHOLARSHIPS AND PRIZES.

The Institution offers each year a scholarship of £100 per annum, tenable at Cambridge University for three years, in a course of study selected by the successful applicant out of several prescribed by the Council, and three one-year courses of £125, also tenable at Cambridge unless the selected candidate has applied to use his emoluments for the purpose of travel. The holder of a one-year course is required to state the direction in which he wishes to study, and to undergo such courses of lectures and instruction as may be prescribed, and to carry out an original piece of work under his supervisor's guidance. Detailed particulars of the conditions may be obtained on application to the Secretary.

A number of valuable prizes are offered in connection with the Institution Examinations.

MEMBERSHIP.

The total membership of the Institution is nearly 8,000, and consists of four classes, viz.: Honorary Members, Fellows, Professional Associates, and Associates. There are also classes of Probationers and Students attached to, but not corporate members of, the Institution.

Students.—In order to qualify for admission to the Class of Students, candidates must be between the ages of 18 and 21, must have passed either the Preliminary Examination of the Institution or one of the specified Examinations accepted in lieu thereof, and must be either (1) pupils or technical assistants in the offices of members of the Institution or other persons substantially engaged in one or other of the branches of the profession as defined above; or (2) studying with a view to entering the profession at such places of professional instruction as the Council may approve.

Candidates under the age of 21 are advised to become Students; for, in addition to the use of the Library and Loan Library, receipt of the Journal and the right to attend meetings, they are entitled to substantial advantages in the Professional Examinations in respect of percentage of pass marks.

Students remain attached to their class until the end of the calendar year in which they attain the age of 21, and may then be enrolled in the class of Probationers.

Probationers are persons whose period of Studentship has expired or who have passed the Intermediate Examination. They may continue as Probationers until the end of the calendar year during which they shall have been for five years enrolled in that class, or until the end of the third calendar year after that in which they passed the Intermediate Examination, whichever period first terminates.

All candidates for the Intermediate Examination are required to give an undertaking that, if successful in passing, they will forthwith become Probationers and so remain for the full term allowed by the By-Laws.

Probationers are entitled to use the Library and Loan Library, to attend meetings and to receive the publications.

Professional Associates.—Candidates desirous of election to the class of Professional Associates must be not less than 21 years of age, and must have passed the Preliminary Examination (or an examination accepted in lieu thereof) and the Intermediate and Final Examinations. Candidates holding a University degree in subjects approved by the Council as appertaining to the surveying profession may take a single examination in place of the Intermediate and Final. After passing the examinations, candidates are eligible for election to the class of Professional Associates, provided that they are no longer in statu pupillari and are actually engaged in professional work as Surveyors.

Holders of the B.A. and B.Sc. degrees in Estate Management, granted respectively by the Universities of Cambridge and London, may be elected as Professional Associates without examination on satisfying the Council that they are engaged in professional work and have received proper practical training in the profession.

Fellows.—Candidates must be not less than 30 years of age, must have passed either (1) the Preliminary or an exempting examination and the Intermediate and Final Examinations, or

(2) the Direct Fellowship Examination; and must have held for five years, and be holding, a position of complete responsibility equivalent to that of a principal in an established business.

There are special arrangements for the election of Colonial Fellows.

ASSOCIATES must be persons over 21 years of age, not Surveyors by profession, whose pursuits are such as to qualify them to co-operate with Surveyors in the advancement of professional knowledge.

HONORARY MEMBERS must be persons who, either by reason of their position or experience, or their eminence in science, may be enabled to render assistance in promoting the objects of the Institution; but are not engaged in practice as Surveyors in Great Britain or Ireland. They have the privilege of being present and taking part in all Ordinary General Meetings, and of access to the Library, but no right of voting, discussing or otherwise interfering in the affairs of the Institution; nor are they called upon to contribute to its funds.

ELECTION TO MEMBERSHIP, other than Honorary Membership, is by ballot of all the corporate members of the Institution. All Fellows, Professional Associates and Associates are required, within twelve months of their election, to attend an Ordinary General Meeting, or, in the case of members residing at a distance from London, a meeting of their County Branch, for the purpose of formal introduction, and to sign the Register. They are also required, within the same period, to deliver to the Council an original paper on a subject connected with the profession, or to make a donation to the Library Fund.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

The following are the rates of contribution to the funds :—

	Annual Subscription.			Admission Fee

EXAMINATIONS.

THE PRELIMINARY AND SPECIAL EXAMINATIONS.—Any candidate intending to follow the profession of Surveyor will be accepted on application, but acceptance for the Preliminary Examination does not imply that a candidate, if successful in passing, will necessarily be regarded as eligible for enrolment as a Student, or for admission to the Intermediate and Final Examinations. There are no age limits, but candidates over the age of 25 are permitted to sit for a special Examination, instead of the Preliminary, to test their general knowledge and education. The entrance fee for the examination is £1 11*s.* 6*d.*

THE INTERMEDIATE EXAMINATION.—A Candidate must be 19 years of age or over, and, unless studying at a recognised place of instruction, must be a pupil or technical assistant* in the office of a member of the Institution or other person substantially engaged in the profession of Surveyor as defined above. The entrance fee for the Examination is £5 5*s.* 0*d.*

THE FINAL EXAMINATION is open to candidates who have passed the Intermediate Examination; the entrance fee is £5 5*s.* 0*d.*

THE DIRECT FELLOWSHIP EXAMINATION.—Candidates for this Examination must be more than 30 years of age, and their position must be such as would make them eligible for direct election as Fellows on passing the Examination. The entrance fee is £5 5*s.* 0*d.*

The Preliminary and Special Examinations are held annually in January, and the Intermediate, Final and Direct Fellowship Examinations in March. Applications to sit for any one of the Examinations must be on the prescribed forms and must be submitted, together with the examination fees, during the previous September.

The Intermediate, Final, and Direct Fellowship Examinations are divided into four Sub-Divisions, to cover the four main branches into which the profession may roughly be divided, viz.:—I., Chiefly Land Agency; II., Chiefly Valuation; III., Chiefly Building or Quantities; and IV., Chiefly Mining. Candidates may elect to be examined in any one of these sub-divisions, but those proceeding to the Final Examination after passing the Intermediate must do so in the same sub-division.

THE SPECIAL SINGLE EXAMINATION for holders of University degrees in a course of study approved by the Council as bearing upon the profession, is held concurrently with the other professional examinations, and combines the subjects required to be taken in both the Intermediate and Final. Entance fee £5 5*s.*

Copies of the rules governing the examinations and giving full particulars thereof, may be obtained from the Secretary on application. The detailed Syllabus and List of Text-Books (which relates to the professional examinations only) can be obtained at a charge of 1*s.*, and past examination papers at 2*s.* for each annual set.

* Articles, although much to be recommended as a method of training for the profession, are not an essential condition of admission to the Examinations.

THE LIBRARY AND COLLECTIONS.

The Institution Library contains approximately 12,000 volumes, and includes a topographical section comprising the great County Histories, all the principal local histories, and a London collection; a series of works on British Agriculture, both ancient and modern, and the allied subjects of Forestry, Geology, Botany, Agricultural Chemistry and Vegetable Physiology; a complete series of professional text-books, including the latest works; works of general science; the Public General Statutes from the earliest times; Law Reports and Law Text-Books; Parliamentary Papers and Reports; the Transactions of kindred societies and general works of reference. It also contains a complete set of the Regional Planning Schemes; all the Town Planning Schemes which so far have been approved by the Minister; a number of valuable single works and rare editions of special interest to the book-lover, as well as a collection of old maps, charts and plans.

The Loan Library is independent of the General Reference Library, and contains some 1,600 volumes, including all the principal professional text-books, which may be borrowed by members according to the prescribed rules.

The Forestry Collection contains a series of home-grown timber exhibits in planks and sections; preserved specimens of the foliage, flowers and fruit of the more common British trees and of timber insects, injurious and otherwise; and a collection of saws, tools and other implements used in forestry. Various causes of damage to timber and the commercial uses to which British woods may be put, are also illustrated.

The Geological Museum includes specimens of the fossils found in British geological formations and a collection of stones used in building.

Schedule of Professional Charges.

TAXATION OF FEES.

When acting in cases where the Surveyor's fees may be the subject of taxation, Members are advised to make arrangements beforehand for the payment of the proper Scale fees.

Fees included in the following Scale are in all cases exclusive of travelling and other expenses, disbursements, plans, copies of documents, and lithography.

Where one Valuer acts between both parties the minimum charge shall be Scale and a half divisible between both parties.

This Scale accords with that authorised by the Auctioneers and Estate Agents' Institute.

1. VALUATION OF FREEHOLD, COPYHOLD OR LEASEHOLD PROPERTY.

One Guinea per cent. on the first £1,000 of the valuation.
Half a Guinea per cent. on the next £9,000 of the valuation.
And a Quarter-Guinea per cent. on the residue of the valuation.

NOTE.—In valuations for mortgage, if an advance is not made, one-third of the above charges, with a minimum fee of five guineas, may be made provided that the intending mortgagee is informed of the arrangement.

2. VALUATION OF FURNITURE, FIXTURES, TRADE STOCKS AND EFFECTS.

5 Guineas per cent. up to £500 and 2½ guineas per cent. on the residue.

3. VALUATION OF PLANT AND MACHINERY.

2½ Guineas per cent. on first £500.
1½ Guineas per cent. on next £4,500.
1 Guinea per cent. on next £5,000.
Over £10,000 by arrangement.
The valuation fee to include inventory.
(Minimum Fee, 5 Guineas.)

4. VALUATION OF HOTEL AND PUBLIC HOUSE FIXTURES, FITTINGS AND CONTENTS.

5 Guineas per cent. on the amount of the Valuation as settled.

WORK UNDER THE LANDS CLAUSES CONSOLIDATION ACT OR OTHER ACTS FOR THE COMPULSORY ACQUISITION OF PROPERTY.

(a) To the Valuer who prepares the Case.

(Including negotiation for a settlement where required.)

Where works of reinstatement are negotiated by the Surveyor the cost of these works should be taken into account in calculating the fee; and any amount set off in respect of Betterment should be added to the amount of settlement for that purpose.

Note.—This Scale, known as Ryde's Scale, does not apply to Arbitrators or Umpires, nor in cases of easement. It is exclusive of attendance on Juries or Umpires or at Arbitrations, in respect of which the minimum fee is £5 5s. per diem.

6. VALUATION FOR PROBATE OR ESTATE DUTY.

Freehold, Copyhold and Leasehold Property.

1 Guinea per cent. on first £1,000 of the valuation; ½ Guinea per cent. on next £4,000; ¼ Guinea per cent. on residue.

Personal Property.

5 Guineas per cent. on the first £100 of the valuation; 2½ Guineas per cent. on next £400; and 1½ Guineas per cent. on the residue (to include the Inventory).

(Minimum Fee, 5 Guineas.)

Note.—This Scale (No. 6) does not apply to contested cases.

---

7. VALUING FOR ANNUAL RENTAL.

Agricultural Property.

7½ Guineas per cent. up to £250; 5 Guineas per cent. on next £250; 2½ Guineas per cent. on residue.

Business and Residential Property.

5 Guineas per cent. up to £300; 2½ Guineas per cent. on residue.

8. VALUATION FOR RATING PURPOSES OF SINGLE PROPERTIES.

For valuations for Ratepayers, Rating Authorities, Assessment Committees, or County Valuation Committees, a valuation fee upon the following scale :—

Net Annual Value.
Not exceeding £1,000	2	Guineas	per cent.	plus 5 Guineas.
Exceeding £1,000 and not exceeding £5,000	2	,,	,,	with a minimum fee of 25 Guineas.
Exceeding £5,000 and not exceeding £10,000	2	,,	,,	upon £5,000.
	1½	,,	,,	,, the residue.
Exceeding £10,000 and not exceeding £20,000	2	,,	,,	,, £5,000.
	1½	,,	,,	,, £5,000.
	1¼	,,	,	,, the residue.
Exceeding £20,000 ..	2	,,	,,	,, £5,000.
	1½	,,	,,	,, £5,000.
	1	,,	,,	,, the residue.

For valuations for Ratepayers, the Net Annual Value for the purposes of this Scale of Fees is the Net Annual Value in the Valuation List at the time when objection is lodged.

For valuations for a Rating Authority or an Assessment Committee, the Net Annual Value is the Net Annual Value finally determined by the Assessment Committee.

Note.—In addition to the above scale a fee of 5 guineas per day in respect of attendance before Assessment Committees and 10 guineas per day for attendance before Quarter Sessions.

9. FARM VALUATIONS.

(a) For Valuing Live and Dead Farming Stock, Agricultural Plant, Fixtures and Growing Crops :—

5 Guineas per cent. on the first £100.

5 Guineas up to £100.
2½ Guineas per cent. on next £900.
1½ Guineas per cent. on the residue.

The above charges (a) and (b) are to be calculated on the GROSS amount of a valuation before any deductions are made therefrom for dilapidations or other matters dealt with, and are not intended to cover the preparation and adjustment of Claims for disturbance under the Agricultural Holdings Acts, or other special matters, for which an additional charge commensurate with the amount of work involved is to be made.

(c) For Settling Dilapidations to Buildings, Land, etc. :—

5 Guineas per cent. on amount of the settlement.

10. MARKING, VALUING, AND SELLING TIMBER AND UNDERWOOD.

5 Guineas per cent. on the amount realised.

When Valuing only :—

5 Guineas per cent. on £500.
2½ Guineas per cent. on residue.

11. SALES OF FREEHOLD AND COPYHOLD ESTATES AND HOUSES AND GROUND LEASES.

(a) Negotiating a Sale by Private Contract or introducing a Purchaser.
5 per cent. on first £300.
2½ per cent. on next £4,700.
1½ per cent. on residue.

(b) Sales by Auction.

(Including advising as to reserves.)

Commission same as in (a) for Sale by Private Contract.

Sale before Auction.

After issue of advertisements Commission same as in (a).

Non-Sale.

In the event of non-sale at the Auction a fee, the amount of which is a matter of arrangement, shall be payable.

Sale after Auction.

In the event of the property being sold within three months after the Auction, the charges on non-sale would merge into the ordinary commission then payable.

NOTES.—(1) In addition to the above charges, whether under (a) or (b), a commission on the amount paid for chattels, other moveable effects, timber and tenant-right, of 5 per cent. on £500 and 2½ per cent. on residue (to include inventory and valuation if required) is payable.

(2) Where the division of an estate into a number of lots involves substantial additional work, there shall be an increased remuneration to be arranged between the vendor and auctioneer.

(3) In cases where two agents are co-operating at the request of the owner, the commission shall be at the rate of Scale and a quarter.

12. EFFECTING A PURCHASE.

(Including advising as to value if required.)

One-half the fee charged on Sales.

NOTE.—When more than one property has been reported upon, an extra fee will be chargeable. Where no purchase is effected, the usual fee for valuation should be charged.

13. LETTING LAND ON A BUILDING LEASE.

(a) On Ground Rents up to £50, one year's Ground Rent.

(b) On Ground Rents exceeding £50 and not exceeding £100—as in (a) on the first £50, plus 75 per cent. on the residue.

(c) On Ground Rents exceeding £100 and not exceeding £1,000—as in (b) on the first £100, plus 50 per cent. on the residue.

(d) On Ground Rents exceeding £1,000—as in (c) on the first £1,000, plus 25 per cent. on the residue.

Where a premium is paid there would be payable 5 per cent. on the first £1,000 and 2½ per cent. on the balance.

14. THE ASSIGNMENT OF BUILDING AGREEMENTS AT A PREMIUM.

One-half the scale charge for letting land on a building lease (No. 13, above), together with 5 per cent. on the first £1,000 of the premium and 2½ per cent. on the balance.

15. FOR APPROVING PLANS SUBMITTED BY LESSEES, AND INSPECTING BUILDINGS DURING PROGRESS.

One Guinea per cent. up to £20,000 on the estimated cost of each building. Half Guinea per cent. on residue.

(Minimum Fee, 3 Guineas.)

16. ESTATE AGENCIES AND COLLECTION OF RENTS OR TITHES.

(Including Management, where required.)

Ground Rents	2½ to 5 per cent. on the gross rental, according to the amount of the rents and number of collections.
Other property and tithes	5 per cent. on the gross rental.
Agricultural property ..	7½ ,, ,, ,,
Weekly property	10 ,, ,, ,,

17. ON LETTING UNFURNISHED PREMISES OR DISPOSING OF LEASES OTHER THAN GROUND LEASES BY ASSIGNMENT OR OTHERWISE.

(a) On Letting Unfurnished Premises.

If the Rent be £100 or less :—

Where the term is for One Year or less—

5 per cent. on One Year's Rent.

Where the term is for more than One Year—

7½ per cent. on One Year's Rent.

If the Rent be over £100 the scale above shall apply to the first £100. On the excess rental over that amount—

Where the term is for Three Years or less—

5 per cent.

Where the term is for more than Three Years—

7½ per cent.

In the case of Leases requiring the Lessee to undertake the Repair of the Demised Premises, the Commission shall be 10 per cent. on One Year's Rent, whatever the term.

(b) Disposal of Leasehold Property.

On Disposing of all Leases (other than Ground Leases) by assignment or otherwise :—

On the Rent the same Commission as for a Letting.

(a) and (b).

In either of the above cases, (a) and (b), upon the premium and any consideration which is equivalent thereto, a Commission of 5 per cent. up to £1,000, and 2½ per cent. on the residue; and on any sum obtained for Fixtures, Furniture, or Effects of any kind, a Commission of 5 per cent. up to £500, and 2½ per cent. on the residue.

Should the rent be a progressive one, then the Commission is based on the average rent for the whole period of the term granted.

When a property, which an Agent has been instructed to let or sell, is let by him with an option to purchase, and the tenant afterwards exercises his option, the Commission for selling, less the Commission already paid on the letting, will then become payable.

18. ON LETTING FURNISHED PREMISES AND SPORTING RIGHTS, INCLUDING COLLECTION OF RENT.

5 per cent. on the first year's rental, and 2½ per cent. on the rental for the remainder of the term.

19. ON NEGOTIATING TENANCIES OF UNFURNISHED PREMISES.

When Acting on Behalf of the Tenant.

One-half the Scale on letting.

Note.—Where more than one property has been reported upon an extra fee will be chargeable.

20. PREPARING SPECIFICATION OF DILAPIDATIONS AND SETTLING THE AMOUNT IF REQUIRED.

Five Guineas per cent. on the amount of the settlement or on the estimated cost of complying with the Schedule.

21. LEVELLING, PREPARING DRAWINGS AND SETTING OUT ESTATES FOR ROAD-MAKING, DRAINAGE, ETC., AND SUPERINTENDING THE EXECUTION OF THE WORKS.

The charge for the preparation of a general development scheme must necessarily vary with the character and size of the estate.

For Road Construction, the preparation of drawing and specifications, obtaining the approval of the Authority, obtaining tenders and superintending construction of roads and sewers—

5 per cent. upon the outlay.

NOTE.—Where the work is not proceeded with, half the above scale will be charged.

22. FOR LAND SURVEYING AND THE PREPARATION OF PLANS AND MAPS.

Fee by arrangement, depending on the intricacy of the work.

23. DESIGNING NEW BUILDINGS, ARCHITECTURAL WORK.

The R.I.B.A. Scale, Section 1 of which is set out below :—

I. FEES ON NEW WORKS.

For taking the Client's instructions, preparing sketch design, making approximate estimate of cost by cubic measurement, or otherwise, preparing drawings and specifications for the purpose of estimates, obtaining tenders, advising on tenders and in preparation of contract, selecting and instructing Consultants, furnishing to the Contractor one copy of the drawings and specification and such other details as are necessary for the proper carrying out of the works, general supervision as above defined, issuing certificates for payment, and passing and certifying accounts, the charge in respect of new works is to be a percentage on the total cost of all executed works as follows :—

(a) If the contract or order exceeds £2,000 the percentage is to be 6 per cent.

(b) If the contract or order does not exceed £2,000 the percentage is to be 10 per cent. in the case of works costing £100 graduated to 6 per cent. in the case of works costing £2,000 as the special character of such works may render appropriate.

24. PREPARING BILLS OF QUANTITIES AND VALUING WORK EXECUTED.

The Scale of Charges for the preparation of Bills of Quantities set out in 1. (a) below is an over-all Scale, based upon the inclusion of all provisional amounts which do not normally call for measurement.

The measurement and valuation of variations and the preparation of statements of account at the conclusion of the works are separate services for which the scale set out in 1. (b) provides.

1. LUMP SUM CONTRACTS: ARCHITECTURAL WORK.

When acting in the capacity of a quantity surveyor in connection with:—

(a) Taking out and preparing Bills of Quantities:—

(i) BASIC SCALE.

2½ per cent. upon the estimated cost of the work up to £10,000.

2 per cent. upon the balance above £10,000.

(ii) WORKS OF ALTERATION.

The charges in sub-paragraph (i) shall be increased by ½ per cent. in respect of works of alteration.

(iii) GENERALLY.

Fees are to be calculated upon the basis of the accepted tender for the whole of the work. In the event of no tender being accepted, fees are to be calculated upon the basis of the lowest original bona fide tender received. In the event of no tender being received, the fees are to be calculated upon a reasonable valuation of the work, based upon the original Bill of Quantities.

In calculating the amount on which fees are payable, the total of the Credit Bill (if any) and the total of any Alternative Bills are to be added, but any Omission Bill forming part of an Alternative Bill is not to be included unless actual measurement is necessary to arrive at the Omission.

The cost of lithographing or printing the Bills of Quantities is not included in the above Scale, but is to be charged in addition at the net amount payable to the lithographer or printer.

(b) Measuring and making up accounts of variations upon Contracts, including pricing and agreeing totals with Contractors.

2½ per cent. upon the amount of the additions, and

1½ per cent. upon the amount of the omissions, less the total of Provisional sums or work omitted as a whole.

No charge shall be made for the adjustment of provisional lump sums in cases where the exercise of professional skill is not involved.

2 per cent. above the rates in the foregoing paragraphs.

(d) Estimating upon Bills of Quantities:—

½ per cent.

(e) Preparing approximate Quantities and estimating upon same:—

½ per cent. upon the estimated cost, or, alternatively, a charge to be based upon the time involved.

(f) Surveying works in progress, taking particulars and reporting for Interim Certificates:—

½ per cent. upon the amount of each valuation less the amount of any previous valuation or valuations upon which fees shall have been paid, or alternatively, a charge to be based upon the time involved.

(g) Taking particulars on site and writing specifications for works of alteration or repair, including supervision if required :—

7½ per cent. upon the amount expended, or alternatively, a charge to be based upon the time involved.

NOTE.—In cases where any of the materials used in construction are supplied by the building owner, the percentage charge to be made upon the estimated or actual value thereof.

II. SCHEDULE CONTRACTS: ARCHITECTURAL WORK.

Preparing, pricing and agreeing schedules of prices :—

A charge to be based upon the time involved.

Measuring under Schedule and making up accounts, including pricing and agreeing totals :—

2½ per cent. upon the gross amount of the Account.

The above percentage applies only to the complete measurement and valuation of the buildings or building operations when undertaken as a whole and included in one account. When the measurement proceeds by stages involving the preparation of periodical bills, then the percentage charge shall be increased by ½ per cent.

NOTE.—In cases where any of the materials used in construction are supplied by the building owner, the percentage charge to be made upon the estimated or actual value thereof.

III. PRIME COST CONTRACTS.

Checking prime costs in " Cost plus Profit " Contracts and making up final accounts of works executed :—

1¼ per cent. except on work necessitating measurement which is to be paid for at the rates previously laid down.

IV. CIVIL ENGINEERING WORK.

Generally speaking, the charges for services in relation to work which can be classed as Civil Engineering work, are, as regards the percentages, to be half those for Architectural work, but the same as the latter in respect of charges based upon time.

V. LITIGATION AND ARBITRATION.

For qualifying to give evidence; settling proofs, conferences with Solicitors and Counsel; attendance in the Courts or before Arbitrators, or other tribunals; and for other services in connection with litigation and arbitration the charges are to be based upon the time involved, but are in no case to be less than a minimum of £5 5s. per day of not exceeding six hours.
